

SLINGSHOT

Issue # 78
Summer 2003

Free

Página en Español / Spanish Page

SLINGSHOT

Target WTO:

From Sacramento to Cancun

WTO attacks water and agriculture-We attack WTO

By PB Floyd

The war on Iraq is over, but the struggle for control of the rest of the world is still raging. The battle pits a tiny fraction of the globe's rich and powerful elite, using corporations as their weapons, and bodies like the World Trade Organization as their Central Command, against everyone else and the natural environment. This summer, the front is in North America on the streets of Sacramento, California and Cancun, Mexico, where the WTO will be meeting.

Thousands of people are mobilizing to disrupt the WTO's Fifth Ministerial Summit in Cancun September 10-14. Cancun is the first opportunity to directly confront the WTO since Seattle, when tens of thousands of people shut down the meeting and exposed the secretive, undemocratic WTO process to public scrutiny. After Seattle, the WTO had to have their next meeting in Qatar, a US-backed monarchy free of annoying demonstrators or pesky democratic participation.

In Cancun, the WTO won't be able to hide from the people's wrath. The Mexican people — especially hard hit by economic globalization, which has meant more corporate control, pollution, sweatshops and poverty — have been mobilizing to shut down the WTO meeting. Folks in the United States and Canada can help by going to Cancun.

But you don't need to go to Mexico to resist the WTO's centralization of power. In preparation for the Cancun summit, the United States has invited Ministers of Trade, Agriculture, and Environment from 180 nations to a pre-WTO meeting in Sacramento

The struggle at the WTO isn't only to save family and subsistence farmers from centralized corporate control — it's to save the environment from pesticides and genetic engineering.

Sacramento is an amazing opportunity to refocus public attention

LIFE AFTER PATRIOTISM:

THE BRAIN BEHIND THE BRAINWASH

By xarik nerdcore

An intelligent US public? That's not the goal of the media, with its dumbed down soup of fear, sensationalism, and unquestioning patriotism. Radical grassroots activists, overwhelmed with the flood of insane patriotic imagery, make a false assumption: that people who buy into the stupid american dream are themselves.... Stupid.

True, it's a lot easier to write folks off as stupid, than to actually engage with them. But when we focus on insane displays of patriotism, rather than the person behind them, we actually let the media and the government win. We perpetuate the fear of disagreement, debate, and critical thinking that allows this government to build an empire on lies.

Who are we, as radical grassroots activists

WTO attacks water and agriculture-We attack WTO

By PB Floyd

The war on Iraq is over, but the struggle for control of the rest of the world is still raging. The battle pits a tiny fraction of the globe's rich and powerful elite, using corporations as their weapons, and bodies like the World Trade Organization as their Central Command, against everyone else and the natural environment. This summer, the front is in North America on the streets of Sacramento, California and Cancún, Mexico, where the WTO will be meeting.

Thousands of people are mobilizing to disrupt the WTO's Fifth Ministerial Summit in Cancún September 10-14. Cancún is the first opportunity to directly confront the WTO since Seattle, when tens of thousands of people shut down the meeting and exposed the secretive, undemocratic WTO process to public scrutiny. After Seattle, the WTO had to have their next meeting in Qatar, a US-backed monarchy free of annoying demonstrators or pesky democratic participation.

In Cancún, the WTO won't be able to hide from the people's wrath. The Mexican people — especially hard hit by economic globalization, which has meant more corporate control, pollution, sweatshops and poverty — have been mobilizing to shut down the WTO meeting. Folks in the United States and Canada can help by going to Cancún.

But you don't need to go to Mexico to resist the WTO's centralization of power. In preparation for the Cancún summit, the United States has invited Ministers of Trade, Agriculture, and Environment from 180 nations to a pre-WTO meeting in Sacramento June 23-25. The meeting is intended to prepare treaty text for the agriculture portion of the WTO's Cancún summit.

Agriculture may be one of the WTO's Achilles heels, because the United States, Europe and many other countries are severely split over use of genetically modified plants and animals and farm subsidies. If agreement is impossible on agriculture, the rest of the WTO's expansion will also be threatened. Thus, successfully disrupting the Sacramento meeting will powerfully set the stage for Cancún.

The US government hopes they'll be able to push through agreements in Sacramento to open up the world's dinner tables to corporate dominated, factory farmed mega-agriculture. Corporate forces are putting on a private "Expo On Agricultural Science and Technology" at the same time as the WTO meeting to push their agenda. The US and a "coalition of the willing" recently took steps in a WTO court to sue European Union countries which have been cautious about permitting genetically modified organisms in Europe.

The struggle at the WTO isn't only to save family and subsistence farmers from centralized corporate control — it's to save the environment from pesticides and genetic engineering.

Sacramento is an amazing opportunity to refocus public attention from Bush's agenda of war, tax cuts, fear and attacks on civil liberties back to our agenda — the struggle for freedom, self-determination and an ecologically sustainable future. During the war, tens of thousands of people in the Bay Area took the streets and shut down business as usual. Let's build on what we learned and go one better by shutting down the WTO meeting in Sacramento.

The elite can only lose the Struggle in Sacramento, because they can only save the meeting from chaos by turning California's capitol into an armed camp. So be it — ultimately the corporate capitalist world envisioned by the WTO requires open violence to enforce the systematic theft of labor power and natural resources. Let's make sure the system's violence is exposed so the whole world can see it. Just because the overt war in Iraq has ended doesn't mean that the everyday war against the earth and the public has changed. The

Continued on page 15

BEHIND THE BRAINWASH

By xarik nerdcore

An intelligent US public? That's not the goal of the media, with its dumbed down soup of fear, sensationalism, and unquestioning patriotism. Radical grassroots activists, overwhelmed with the flood of insane patriotic imagery, make a false assumption: that people who buy into the stupid american dream are themselves.... Stupid.

True, it's a lot easier to write folks off as stupid, than to actually engage with them. But when we focus on insane displays of patriotism, rather than the person behind them, we actually let the media and the government win. We perpetuate the fear of disagreement, debate, and critical thinking that allows this government to build an empire on lies.

Who are we, as radical grassroots activists, often based in urban areas, writing off? We don't write off the urban poor, and other traditionally "oppressed" people — native people, migrant workers, for example. The people we discount are people who have bought, to some extent, into the american dream. From the far left, we see the folks in cookie-cutter suburban neighborhoods, the folks flocking to the mall, the callers on AM Talk Radio, all feasting on american milk and

Moment of Opportunity Torque the System Towards Radical Action!

By PB Floyd

In the immediate aftermath of the US war against Iraq, some folks who oppose a global US military empire are feeling discouraged and isolated. This is a big mistake — in this for massive social change. The direction of that change is unknown, with all parties hoping to seize the moment and promote their own agenda. It's up to the anti-war movement, and

Agriculture may be one of the WTO's Achilles heels, because the United States, Europe and many other countries are severely split over use of genetically modified plants and animals and farm subsidies. If agreement is impossible on agriculture, the rest of the WTO's expansion will also be threatened. Thus, successfully disrupting the Sacramento meeting will powerfully set the stage for Cancún.

The US government hopes they'll be able to push through agreements in Sacramento to open up the world's dinner tables to corporate dominated, factory farmed mega-agra corporate food. Corporate forces are putting on a private "Expo On Agricultural Science and Technology" at the same time as the WTO meeting to push their agenda. The US and a "coalition of the willing" recently took steps in a WTO court to sue European Union countries which have been cautious about permitting genetically modified organisms in Europe.

...to organize the struggle for freedom, self-determination and an ecologically sustainable future. During the war, tens of thousands of people in the Bay Area took the streets and shut down business as usual. Let's build on what we learned and go one better by shutting down the WTO meeting in Sacramento.

The elite can only lose the Struggle in Sacramento, because they can only save the meeting from chaos by turning California's capitol into an armed camp. So be it — ultimately the corporate capitalist world envisioned by the WTO requires open violence to enforce the systematic theft of labor power and natural resources. Let's make sure the system's violence is exposed so the whole world can see it. Just because the overt war in Iraq has ended doesn't mean that the everyday war against the earth and the public has changed. The

Continued on page 15

Moment of Opportunity Torque the System Towards Radical Action!

By PB Floyd

In the immediate aftermath of the US war against Iraq, some folks who oppose a global US military empire are feeling discouraged and isolated. This is a big mistake — in this unsettled period, there are tremendous opportunities to advance the struggle against capitalism and its military empires.

The period leading up to the war brought millions of people around the world out into the streets against the war. Bush didn't seem to care, and the war went ahead anyway. Big fucking deal! The point here isn't that the war happened in spite of massive protest — the point is the massive protest, and that millions of people have learned a crucial lesson — that the political system is just going to ignore their polite protests.

The disappointment of millions of people who were unsuccessful in stopping the war using polite protest can lead in two directions: either people will be pushed into apathy and silence, or they'll get radicalized and start to realize that the only way to stop the system's drive towards mass murder is to figure out how to disrupt, resist and fight the system. If the system won't listen to the people, the people will have to tear the system down as an act of self-defense.

The war, the disunity over the war amongst the capitalist powers, the crisis at the UN, and the global popular resistance to the war all disrupted the previous political balance. Like a balloon that was over-inflated and burst, all of the pieces of the game have been briefly tossed into the air.

Such an historical rupture can open the way for massive social change. The direction of that change is unknown, with all parties hoping to seize the moment and promote their own agenda. It's up to the anti-war movement, and particularly radicals and anti-authoritarians within the anti-war movement, to make sure that the change in this unstable period is positive, not negative.

Now is a crucial time to organize, continue the struggle, emphasize lessons learned, and transform the organizations and people mobilized by the war from the reactive anti-war effort to a struggle for something new. It's essential in the aftermath of the war to describe what we're for — and move beyond what we're against.

Our alternative vision is of a world organized around freedom, self-determination, cooperation and meeting human needs — not domination, violence, coercion and profit. Most people realize that naked might shouldn't make right. It's easy to confuse Bush's inevitable military victory with a political victory — with winning the peace. The anti-war movement may

Continued on page 14

don't write off the urban poor, and other

traditionally "oppressed" people — native people, migrant workers, for example. The people we discount are people who have bought, to some extent, into the american dream. From the far left, we see the folks in cookie-cutter suburban neighborhoods, the folks flocking to the mall, the callers on AM Talk Radio, all feasting on american milk and honey.

Undeniably, folks who love the american dream are buying into a web of oppression. But the fact that they don't appear to see this truth and fail to analyze the consequences of their actions, doesn't mean they're one-dimensional humans without potential for change. The american dream is the status quo, easy to adopt, if hard to actually obtain. People often have thoughts and feelings much more complex than what's seen on the outside. Truth be told, many "oppressed" people also want the american dream, it's just not happening for them.

Neither is the appearance of american-style success a guarantee of happiness. There is real pain in the suburbs, small towns, rural areas, as well as in the cities—generalized dissatisfaction with life that goes far beyond 30-second sensationalized trauma spots in the news.

Many grassroots activists know this pain —

Continued on page 11

Este artículo en Español, Página 9

SLINGSHOT

Slingshot is a quarterly, independent, radical, newspaper published in the East Bay since 1988.

In an attempt to expand our artistic horizons, Slingshotters this issue debated the editorial content of the paper by engaging in competitive interpretive dance. It was an awesome sight; the staff frolicking and flinging themselves to and fro around the loft/office, emoting heavy political content with the added benefit of participating in strenuous, aerobic physical activity, to keep our blood flowing.

Finally, after fifteen years of publishing, we had our first ever retreat in April. What was planned as a sunny Saturday in one of the many beautiful nature spots here in the Bay Area, turned out to be a soggy, lightning and thunder filled afternoon in a leaky, red VW microbus. That may sound like an Arlo Guthrie song, but it actually was very productive, that is until we got to the bowling alley. No, really.

We decided that we want to change the process so we can publish the paper more often. We want to crunch the distribution cycle from about 3 weeks to just one weekend. That would take a lot more volunteer help that weekend. We talked about how we could get help from people who didn't necessarily want to go to all our meetings and be fully involved in the collective, but who would nonetheless like to help Slingshot expand and thrive.

We also talked about reducing the period between our article brainstorm and our article deadline to just 3 weeks, instead of the current 5. To do that, we would need to find more writers outside the collective who would be willing to write an article or two per issue. Such folks wouldn't have to go to our meetings or even live in the Bay Area. We would like to make these changes starting in 2004. Let us know if you can help.

...
In responding to a reporter's question about the supremes hearing a case on sodomy, Sen. R. Santorum sez he is against all consensual sex. In response to that, a letter to 'Savage Love' suggested naming a sex act after Mr. S. We at Slingshot think this is a fine idea and after much heated debate and experimentation, suggest eating out an armpit as the act to henceforth to be dubbed Santoruming.

State Fucking With Anarchists

Camilo Viveiros Still Needs Support

Around the world during the war people gathered in the streets to demonstrate against Bush's war in Iraq. Two and a half years ago, many gathered to greet the nomination of George the lesser in the streets of Philadelphia.

During that earlier week of protests, the Republican National Committee worked with Police Commissioner John Timoney to silence dissent by attacking civil liberties. Unlike N30 in Seattle, Commissioner Timoney's police avoided public displays of violence and instead quelled dissent by arresting protesters on spurious misdemeanor and felony charges. 420 people were arrested. Over the last two and a half years, most of those charges have been dropped.

However, the city of Philadelphia still intends to press charges against tenant organizer Camilo Viveiros for his participation in a rally where the Philadelphia police force responded with excessive force, riding bicycles into people and beating them bloody with batons. Police Commissioner John Timoney came down to the melee himself, leading the bicycle cavalry into the bodies of the protesters. Timoney alleges that Camilo attacked him with a bike during this confrontation.

Godzilla Kicks Ass, Dude

Hi Slingshot,

I just moved into a cell that someone had left a copy of Slingshot, Winter 2002 issue in. I really enjoyed it and found a lot in common with most all the views and agenda's expressed. What's a trip is you guys also chose to put "Godzilla" on the cover of that issue. I actually wrote some lyrics about Bin Laden hummed to the Blue Oyster Cult's "Godzilla" song. Below is a copy of the Judge Pamela Dembe had thrown out the most serious charges against Camilo, stating they are "not supported by anything, frankly." However, District Attorney Lynne Abraham successfully lobbied the court to restore many of the charges. He now faces up to 40 years in prison. Also, Abraham has repeatedly postponed the trial to prepare a better case against him. As lawyers pointed out during the RNC demonstrations, the government and the police are trying to wrongly equate street protests with terrorism. Timoney himself contributed to this discourse, calling for a federal investigation in the this "nationwide conspiracy." We must prevent the criminal injustice system from crushing another one of our most conscientious organizers. We must ensure that an innocent man remain free so that he can continue his work in the community. The Friends of Camilo invite people to learn more about Camilo's case at the website www.friendsofcamilo.org. The website also contains information about joining a support group, a calendar of events, and instructions on how to write a letter to Judge Hughes telling him to drop all charges against Camilo. www.friendsofcamilo.org

Oregon Dept. Of Corr. Censoring Anarchist Material

Dear Slingshot,

I am a prisoner at Oregon State Penitentiary, I have been for eight years. Currently I have a lawsuit going against the Oregon Dept. of Corrections for excessive, unreasonable censorship of Anarchist materials/publications and other publications who happen to print an article

Mexican Anarchist Appreciates Your Letters

Mexican anarchist Carlos Alberto Estrada Arroyo was recently sentenced to 12 and a half years in jail for an alleged robbery that he denies having anything to do with. On May 14, 2001, Carlos was on his way back to work from a lunch break at his job as a brick mason in Mexico City, when he was arrested by the police. He was then beaten and tortured but still refused to admit guilt to a crime that he didn't commit. Carlos was politically active including being involved in the large UNAM strike in 2000 that was crushed by the police.

Carlos and his family are thankful for the international support he has received including help from Argentina, Brazil, the U.S., France and Poland. His mother Sara Arroyo Granados writes: "...I am writing to thank you for the economic and moral help that has been provided to my son. The economic aid that has been given to us without knowing that we are a family with scarce resources and the letters you have sent to Carlos have cheered him up so much. They are like spinach for Popeye. When he is feeling down we bring him the letters and it brings back his strength. For this I implore that you don't stop writing him. Even for me personally, I feel very inspired to know that we have friends, true friends. Thank you kids, thank you from all of my heart. To all in general, from all the states of the republic and of countries who have sent support, I know you may not believe in God, but I hope that life gives you all that can be desired. Goodbye."

To send letters or donations to Carlos contact: upl_upl@yahoo.com expand and thrive.

We also talked about reducing the period between our article brainstorm and our article deadline to just 3 weeks, instead of the current 5. To do that, we would need to find more writers outside the collective who would be willing to write an article or two per issue. Such folks wouldn't have to go to our meetings or even live in the Bay Area. We would like to make these changes starting in 2004. Let us know if you can help.

In responding to a reporter's question about the supremes hearing a case on sodomy, Sen. R. Santorum sez he is against all consensual sex. In response to that, a letter to 'Savage Love' suggested naming a sex act after Mr. S. We at Slingshot think this is a fine idea and after much heated debate and experimentation, suggest eating out an armpit as the act to henceforth to be dubbed Santoruming.

We are always on the lookout for writers, artists, editors, photographers, (folks from out of the area/US sincerely wanted!) distributors and independent thinkers to help us put out this paper. If you have such skills and would like to contribute we'd greatly appreciate it. Photos of demos or of cool reworkings of the cultural landscape, and stencils, are particularly welcome. If you do send us something, please be open to editorial discussion.

Editorial decisions about Slingshot are made by the collective, but not all articles reflect the opinions of all collective members. We welcome debate, constructive criticism and discussion.

Thanks to everyone who helped us create this issue!!!

Slingshot New Volunteer Meeting

Volunteers interested in getting involved with Slingshot come to the new volunteer meeting September 14th at 1p.m. at the Long Haul in Berkeley (see below).

Article deadline and Next Issue date

Submit your articles for issue 79 by October 18th, 2003. We expect the issue out the end of October

Volume 1, Number 78 Circulation 12,000
Printed May 22, 2003

Slingshot Newspaper

Sponsored by Long Haul
3124 Shattuck Ave Berkeley Ca 94705
Phone: (510) 540-0751
slingshot@tao.ca
<http://www.tao.ca/slingshot>

Circulation Information

Slingshot is free in the Bay Area and is Timoney came down to the melee himself leading the bicycle cavalry into the bodies of the protesters. Timoney alleges that Camilo attacked him with a bike during this confrontation.

Godzilla Kicks Ass, Dude

Hi Slingshot,

I just moved into a cell that someone had left a copy of Slingshot, Winter 2002 issue in. I really enjoyed it and found a lot in common with most all the views and agenda's expressed. What's a trip is you guys also chose to put "Godzilla" on the cover of that issue. I actually wrote some lyrics about Bin Laden hummed to the Blue Oyster Cult's "Godzilla" song. Below is as copy of the lyrics for ya. Feel free to publish them and even publish my name and current residence here at the state prison. I'm only doing a short violation but I'm looking for like minded people to write to.

When I parole I'll be homeless, I plan on residing in the Bay Area/Berkeley temporarily but have dreams and goals of traveling America. I've done a lot of time since 1990 (pretty much all of the 90's) so even though parole will still have my number, I'm not gonna let it restrict my happiness and ambition of seeking personal freedom- "Fuck State Parole." Everytime I get out it's my time! My life- My way!

Anyway, I'm curious about the current state of Albany's Natural Dumpsite? That article about such a place really intrigued me. You got my sympathy and agreement on saving such an area at its natural state of growth. I wish I could be there to help and support, possibly soon. I loved your ideas about everyone coming together. All walks of life and outcasts, united together! I'm a 31 year old, ex-punkrocker/lost identity, anti-social, wingnut-big gg fan.

Welp, thanks for your time. please write back. Respectfully for all tribes.

One love,
Alfred Busby T37800
San Quentin State Prison
San Quentin, CA 94974

GOD - ZZILLA

Like a masquerading pirate, he rocked the Kings ship, then ducked in a cave and Laighed at the world while he took a shit
Oh yeah, got to go! Go-go Bin Ladin on how to write a letter to Judge Hughes telling him to drop all charges against Camilo.

www.friendsofcamilo.org

Oregon Dept. Of Corr. Censoring Anarchist Material

Dear Slingshot,

I am a prisoner at Oregon State Penitentiary, I have been for eight years. Currently I have a lawsuit going against the Oregon Dept. of Corrections for excessive, unreasonable censorship of Anarchist materials/publications and other publications who happen to print an article containing Anarchist symbols and statements/articles that contain Anarchist symbols. All funds that I do manage to accumulate are going towards this legal action. Currently, I, and my cellmate, Rob Los Ricos, are serving 120 days in the "hole" for unauthorized organization for fighting these restrictions. Both of us can be reached at the Oregon State Penitentiary.

Brian McCarvill 11037967
Rob Los Ricos 12112716
2605 State St.
Salem, OR 97310

Objurgating in Oregon,
Brian McCarvill

Organizer Update

Thanks to everyone who bought a 2003 Slingshot Organizer — they pay for this paper to be free all over the place. We're already working on the 2004 Organizer, expected out October 1, 2003. Please don't order until then — it's confusing. If you have ideas for the 2004 version (or graphics or historical dates, etc.) send them to us by August 1 or sooner. We're always looking for more listings for our radical contact list, so if you know of one in your area that isn't listed, please send it. Contacts have to have a physical address and usually a phone number. Also, we just got a few 2003 Organizers returned, so you can still get one for $5 (includes shipping). Ignore the website which says we are out.

been given to us without knowing that we are a family with scarce resources and the letters you have sent to Carlos have cheered him up so much. They are like spinach for Popeye. When he is feeling down we bring him the letters and it brings back his strength. For this I implore that you don't stop writing him. Even for me personally, I feel very inspired to know that we have friends, true friends. Thank you kids, thank you from all of my heart. To all in general, from all the states of the republic and of countries who have sent support, I know you may not believe in God, but I hope that life gives you all that can be desired. Goodbye."

To send letters or donations to Carlos contact: upl_upl@yahoo.com

Solidarity Books

Slingshot earlier reported the wrong address for Solidarity Books in our 2003 radical contact list. Check them out if you're in Indianapolis: Our new (and hopefully permanent home, due to a sweet 3-5 year

Community Shuts

Care for a

the area/US sincerely wanted!) distributors and independent thinkers to help us put out this paper. If you have such skills and would like to contribute we'd greatly appreciate it. Photos of demos or of cool reworkings of the cultural landscape, and stencils, are particularly welcome. If you do send us something, please be open to editorial discussion.

Editorial decisions about Slingshot are made by the collective, but not all articles reflect the opinions of all collective members. We welcome debate, constructive criticism and discussion.

Thanks to everyone who helped us create this issue!!!

Slingshot New Volunteer Meeting

Volunteers interested in getting involved with Slingshot come to the new volunteer meeting September 14th at 1p.m. at the Long Haul in Berkeley (see below).

Article deadline and Next Issue date

Submit your articles for issue 79 by October 18th, 2003. We expect the issue out the end of October

Volume 1, Number 78 Circulation 12,000

Printed May 22, 2003

Slingshot Newspaper

Sponsored by Long Haul

3124 Shattuck Ave Berkeley Ca 94705

Phone: (510) 540-0751

slingshot@tao.ca

http://www.tao.ca/slingshot

Circulation Information

Slingshot is free in the Bay Area and is available at Long Haul and Bound Together Books (SF), plus lots of other places. Contact us or come by if you want to distribute Slingshot for free in the Bay Area.

Subscriptions to Slingshot are $1 (until the state is toppled) per issue (bulk mail pre-paid) or $2 for First Class Mail after the issue comes out. International is $2.50 per issue. Back issues are also available. Amazing national free distribution program: Outside of the Bay Area, we'll mail a stack of free copies of Slingshot to distributors, infoshops, bookstores and random friendly individuals for FREE in the US if they give 'em out for free.

If you purchased a 2003 Slingshot organizer via mail order, you've been sent this copy for free. Send us $1 for a one year subscription.

publish my name and current residence in the state prison. I'm only doing a short violation but I'm looking for like minded people to write to.

When I parole I'll be homeless, I plan on residing in the Bay Area/Berkeley temporarily but have dreams and goals of traveling America. I've done a lot of time since 1990 (pretty much all of the 90's) so even though parole will still have my number, I'm not gonna let it restrict my happiness and ambition of seeking personal freedom- "Fuck State Parole." Everytime I get out it's my time! My life- My way!

Anyway, I'm curious about the current state of Albany's Natural Dumpsite? That article about such a place really intrigued me. You got my sympathy and agreement on saving such an area at its natural state of growth. I wish I could be there to help and support, possibly soon. I loved your ideas about everyone coming together. All walks of life and outcasts, united together! I'm a 31 year old, ex-punkrocker/lost identity, anti-social, wingnut-big gg fan.

Welp, thanks for your time. please write back. Respectfully for all tribes.

One love,

Alfred Busby T37800
San Quentin State Prison
San Quentin, CA 94974

GOD - ZZILLA

Like a masquerading pirate, he rocked the Kings ship, then ducked in a cave and Laughed at the world while he took a shit Oh yeah, got to go! Go-go Bin Ladin

Community Shuts Down Red Star Yeast

A coalition of community environmental justice organizations has finally succeeded in shutting down the stinking yeast factory in West Oakland! Lesaffre Yeast, formerly Red Star Yeast, emitted carcinogenic plumes into the densely populated West Oakland neighborhood. Despite efforts of Bay Area Air Quality Management District to actually renew Lesaffre's permit, the company was forced to close after being bombarded by everything from street protests to legal proceedings.

symbols. All funds that I do manage to accumulate are going towards this legal action. Currently, I, and my cellmate, Rob Los Ricos, are serving 120 days in the "hole" for unauthorized organization for fighting these restrictions. Both of us can be reached at the Oregon State Penitentiary.
Brian McCarvill 11037967
Rob Los Ricos 12112716
2605 State St.
Salem, OR 97310

Objurgating in Oregon,
Brian McCarvill

Organizer Update

Thanks to everyone who bought a 2003 Slingshot Organizer — they pay for this paper to be free all over the place. We're already working on the 2004 Organizer, expected out October 1, 2003. Please don't order until then — it's confusing. If you have ideas for the 2004 version (or graphics or historical dates, etc.) send them to us by August 1 or sooner. We're always looking for more listings for our radical contact list, so if you know of one in your area that isn't listed, please send it. Contacts have to have a physical address and usually a phone number. Also, we just got a few 2003 Organizers returned, so you can still get one for $5 (includes shipping). Ignore the website which says we are out.

Solidarity Books

Slingshot earlier reported the wrong address for Solidarity Books in our 2003 radical contact list. Check them out if you're in Indianapolis: Our new (and hopefully permanent home, due to a sweet 3-5 year lease) address is 2123 N. Boulevard, Indianapolis IN 46202. It's right off the 21st st. exit on I-65 just north of downtown Indianapolis. Our number is now (317) 924 4870. We're open everyday from 12-8 pm except Sundays (open 12-6 pm) and Tuesday (closed).

Murder in Palestine: Don't mourn, Organize

ISM calls for summer of action in Palestine

Rachel Corrie, 23, American — run over by an Israeli Army bulldozer and killed defending a doctor's house from demolition.

Tom Hurndall, 21, British — shot in the back of the head by an Israeli sniper while he was trying to get children out of the line of fire.

Bryan Avery, 24, American — shot in the face by Israeli soldiers firing from an armored personnel carrier.

Rachel, Tom and Bryan were in Palestine working with the International Solidarity Movement when they were killed or wounded. All were clearly identified as ISM activists — they wore bright orange vests with reflective stripes.

Their names are western and familiar sounding here in the US. We don't know the names of the hundreds of Palestinians killed by Israeli attacks in the occupied territories over the past months or years. Their names aren't familiar. Because they are not white, their lives and deaths don't seem to matter much to the US news media or the American political system.

The idea behind the ISM is that mostly white activists from powerful countries would not be

"The International Solidarity Movement is urgently calling for international volunteers to come to the Occupied West Bank and Gaza to stand with Palestinians against attacks on their very existence. An international presence CAN make a difference. This Summer, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of concerned citizens from around the world will travel to Palestine to participate in nonviolent direct action in support of Palestinian human rights. Join us!"

In the face of the courage and persistence of the ISM, the Israeli military regime has stepped up attacks on the Palestinian-led human rights organization. On April 16, Army Chief of Staff, Lt. General Moshe Yaalon announced that he had given the order to "take the ISM out", claiming that they "injure [the] freedom of action" of his troops.

True to their word, on May 9 dozens of police and soldiers, 20 army jeeps and an armored personnel carrier surrounded and raided the ISM media office in Beit Sahour, confiscating computers, photographs, files, destroying other equipment and arresting 3 activists. Two westerners were deported.

The western ISM activists killed in Israel over the past months wouldn't have wanted an obituary because they understood that Palestinians — and other poor and non-white people around the world — are dying every day at the hands of western militarism and capitalism. The poor never get an obituary in the western press, even though all of us humans are equally valuable — equally capable of love, life, hope and pain.

We know that the ISM activists were brave, caring, committed activists. They left behind families and friends who loved them. They refused to sit passively and watch brutality. They stood up — powerfully and consistently.

Personal account: Police fire on anti-war demonstrators

Shoot 'em, boys!

Poor cop deportment at the Oakland Port

The Oakland Police Department dealt with anti-war protesters this spring with the same brutal force it visits upon Oakland residents every day. The mainstream media widely reported an incident in which police fired "less than lethal" ammunition — shotgun bean bag rounds, wooden bullets and concussion grenades — at non-violent demonstrators. But the media ignored an earlier incident in which a phalanx of motorcycle cops rode directly into anti-war high school students marching in downtown Oakland, running over several students. And the media routinely ignores Oakland police violence against Oakland's ordinary citizens.

Even when a spectacular case of police brutality surfaces — like the Riders scandal in which four officers framed over a hundred suspects, requiring Oakland to pay out $10 million in legal settlements — the media depicts it as an isolated incident. In fact,

"As the crowd milled about, it seemed that nobody knew what to do or where to go. Many of the protesters, including myself, had never been to the port before and were unfamiliar with the geography there.

"After a few minutes, and for no obvious or apparent reason, the morning quiet was pierced by explosions as the Oakland Police Department opened fire on the crowd. Neither I nor anyone else I have spoken to is aware of any act on the part of any demonstrator that could have provoked this violence.

"From this point on, the Oakland Police Department swept down Middle Harbor Road and Maritime Street firing repeated barrages, over and over again, into the crowd. They fired on the crowd for approximately an hour and a half to two hours as they pursued us for more than a mile. For much of this time, the Oakland Police Department repeatedly drove a line of large police motorcycles into the crowd.

face by Israeli soldiers lining from an armored personnel carrier.

Rachel, Tom and Bryan were in Palestine working with the International Solidarity Movement when they were killed or wounded. All were clearly identified as ISM activists — they wore bright orange vests with reflective stripes.

Their names are western and familiar sounding here in the US. We don't know the names of the hundreds of Palestinians killed by Israeli attacks in the occupied territories over the past months or years. Their names aren't familiar. Because they are not white, their lives and deaths don't seem to matter much to the US news media or the American political system.

The idea behind the ISM is that mostly white activists from powerful countries would not be killed by the Israeli military the way Palestinians are routinely killed. These western activists — living with Palestinians and participating in non-violent actions in the occupied territories and offering humanitarian assistance there — could help protect Palestinians and act as independent observers of Israeli atrocities.

Rachel Corrie

The ISM isn't backing down now that it is obvious that the Israelis will kill western activists just as savagely as they have always killed Palestinians. Instead, they are laying plans for Freedom Summer 2003 between July 1 - August 15:

Palestine to participate in nonviolent direct action in support of Palestinian human rights. Join us!"

In the face of the courage and persistence of the ISM, the Israeli military regime has stepped up attacks on the Palestinian-led human rights organization. On April 16, Army Chief of Staff, Lt. General Moshe Yaalon announced that he had given the order to "take the ISM out", claiming that they "injure [the] freedom of action" of his troops.

True to their word, on May 9 dozens of police and soldiers, 20 army jeeps and an armored personnel carrier surrounded and raided the ISM media office in Beit Sahour, confiscating computers, photographs, files, destroying other equipment and arresting 3 activists. Two westerners were deported.

The western ISM activists killed in Israel over the past months wouldn't have wanted an obituary because they understood that Palestinians — and other poor and non-white people around the world — are dying every day at the hands of western militarism and capitalism. The poor never get an obituary in the western press, even though all of us humans are equally valuable — equally capable of love, life, hope and pain.

We know that the ISM activists were brave, caring, committed activists. They left behind families and friends who loved them. They refused to sit passively and watch brutality. They stood up — powerfully and nonviolently — to do something about it, and for that, they were killed.

What the western ISM activists would have wanted is to know that others would have the courage to rush to fill their places. The struggle for the liberation of Palestinians and all people across the world must continue.

The ISM requests that people wishing to volunteer do so for at least 10 days. They plan to conduct trainings at least once a week from July 1 - Aug. 15 in Bethlehem. The ISM maintains a presence in Palestine year-round, not just during the summer. For more information, contact www.palsolidarity.org/ji, +972-2-277-4602.

—PB

Personal account: Police fire on anti-war demonstrators

Shoot 'em, boys!

Poor cop deportment at the Oakland Port

The Oakland Police Department dealt with anti-war protesters this spring with the same brutal force it visits upon Oakland residents every day. The mainstream media widely reported an incident in which police fired "less than lethal" ammunition — shotgun bean bag rounds, wooden bullets and concussion grenades — at non-violent demonstrators. But the media ignored an earlier incident in which a phalanx of motorcycle cops rode directly into anti-war high school students marching in downtown Oakland, running over several students. And the media routinely ignores Oakland police violence against Oakland's ordinary citizens.

Even when a spectacular case of police brutality surfaces — like the Riders scandal in which four officers framed over a hundred suspects, requiring Oakland to pay out $10 million in legal settlements — the media depicts it as an isolated incident. In fact, police corruption and violence is rampant in Oakland and other large cities. When more middle-class war protesters are the victims, it gets some press — when the victims are poor or non-white, the media turns the other way.

Below we've reprinted excerpts from public testimony given by Oakland resident Scott Fleming, who was shot five times with wooden bullets (4 in the back) while protesting the war on Iraq at the Port of Oakland. We need to struggle against police violence whether its against political demonstrators or the just regular folks.

"On the morning of April 7, a number of protesters gathered at the port and set up peaceful pickets in front of a handful of shipping lines. The protesters were doing nothing more than carrying signs and walking in circles. There was a brass band there which helped create what can only be described as a festive atmosphere. There were a number of middle-aged and senior citizens in the crowd. There was nothing about the tone of the protest or the actions of the protesters that

"As the crowd milled about, it seemed that nobody knew what to do or where to go. Many of the protesters, including myself, had never been to the port before and were unfamiliar with the geography there.

"After a few minutes, and for no obvious or apparent reason, the morning quiet was pierced by explosions as the Oakland Police Department opened fire on the crowd. Neither I nor anyone else I have spoken to is aware of any act on the part of any demonstrator that could have provoked this violence.

"From this point on, the Oakland Police Department swept down Middle Harbor Road and Maritime Street firing repeated barrages, over and over again, into the crowd. They fired on the crowd for approximately an hour and a half to two hours as they pursued us for more than a mile. For much of this time, the Oakland Police Department repeatedly drove a line of large police motorcycles into the crowd.

"The munitions used upon us, especially the wooden and beanbag bullets, are extremely dangerous weapons, which was evidenced by the severity of the injuries that day. As we continued down the road, more and more

The morning quiet was pierced by explosions as the Oakland Police Department opened fire on the crowd

people in the crowd were bleeding and bruised. A law student who was clearly identified as a legal observer by a bright green armband was shot in the head and had blood pouring down his face. A man who works as an environmental engineer for a federal agency was shot in the

Let's blockade Miami

Palestinians are routinely killed. These western activists — living with Palestinians and participating in non-violent actions in the occupied territories and offering humanitarian assistance there — could help protect Palestinians and act as independent observers of Israeli atrocities.

The ISM isn't backing down now that it is obvious that the Israelis will kill western activists just as savagely as they have always killed Palestinians. Instead, they are laying plans for Freedom Summer 2003 between July 1 - August 15:

what the western ISM activists would have wanted is to know that others would have the courage to rush to fill their places. The struggle for the liberation of Palestinians and all people across the world must continue.

The ISM requests that people wishing to volunteer do so for at least 10 days. They plan to conduct trainings at least once a week from July 1 - Aug. 15 in Bethlehem. The ISM maintains a presence in Palestine year-round, not just during the summer. For more information, contact www.palsolidarity.org/ji, +972-2-277-4602.

—PB

Let's blockade Miami

Stop the Free Trade Area of the Americas meeting

Compiled by PB Floyd

Folks around the country are mobilizing against the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) ministerial meeting scheduled for November 17th - 21st in downtown Miami. The FTAA treaty would expand the corporate free trade policies of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) — which applied to Canada, Mexico and the USA — to North and South America. The FTAA would also go beyond the NAFTA rules — strengthening corporate control over workers and the environment and further weakening already pathetic civil society institutions like (corporate) democracy™ and (corporate) government labor and environmental regulations.

There is already widespread popular opposition to the FTAA throughout South America. After centuries of economic exploitation and poverty, the last thing South Americans need is a massive multinational corporate giveaway. FTAA summits in Canada and Equator were met by massive resistance, but FTAA's architects are hoping they'll have it easy in the apathetic old USA. They're not counting on November in Miami resembling November in Seattle. It's up to us to give them a little surprise greeting!

As usual, the FTAA is being negotiated without any meaningful public participation — except our voices and bodies in the streets, which the organizers can't quite prevent (yet). The FTAA would curtail labor laws, push down wages, replace family and subsistence farmers with corporate agribusiness, promote privatization of public industries and cut government services. Corporations would be permitted to sue governments who tried to pass laws to protect the public. Ultimately, the FTAA is designed to concentrate wealth and power into a few corporate hands at the expense of everyone else.

There is already discussion of a Day of Action on November 19 and teach-ins, seminars, reality tours, concerts, forums, rallies and marches all week long. Moreover, the police in Miami have already been organizing their response for a few months, so it looks like the shit could fly in Miami.

Here are (generally liberal) contacts. Hopefully the radicals will show their hand and set up a contact point soon. 202 778-3320, 510 663-0888, www.ftaamiami.org.

middle-class war protesters are the victims, it gets some press — when the victims are poor or non-white, the media turns the other way.

Below we've reprinted excerpts from public testimony given by Oakland resident Scott Fleming, who was shot five times with wooden bullets (4 in the back) while protesting the war on Iraq at the Port of Oakland. We need to struggle against police violence whether its against political demonstrators or the just regular folks.

"On the morning of April 7, a number of protesters gathered at the port and set up peaceful pickets in front of a handful of shipping lines. The protesters were doing nothing more than carrying signs and walking in circles. There was a brass band there which helped create what can only be described as a festive atmosphere. There were a number of middle-aged and senior citizens in the crowd. There was nothing about the tone of the protest or the actions of the protesters that could have led the Oakland Police Department to fear violence or confrontation.

"Nevertheless, when the police arrived on the scene, all of them were wearing gas masks, and a number of them were armed with what we later learned were wooden bullets, beanbag-firing shotguns, and grenades. I have been to countless demonstrations over the years, and I cannot recall a single instance in which any Bay Area police agency has displayed these kinds of weapons or worn gas masks to a political demonstration. I can only surmise that the Oakland Police Department would not have arrived at the demonstration with this type of weaponry unless they had a pre-planned intent to use it.

"The officers lined up on Middle Harbor Road in front of the entrance to American Presidents Line. When they ordered the demonstrators to clear the intersection, the demonstrators complied and the entrance was cleared. Unfortunately, there was nowhere for the demonstrators to go after they cleared the intersection. By blocking Middle Harbor Road, the police denied the demonstrators the nearest and most direct route to leave the port.

dangerous weapons, which was evidenced by the severity of the injuries that day. As we continued down the road, more and more people in the crowd were bleeding and bruised. A law student who was clearly identified as a legal observer by a bright green armband was shot in the head and had blood pouring down his face. A man who works as an environmental engineer for a federal agency was shot in the face and looked to me as if part of his nose was missing. I am told that one woman had tire tracks up her leg after being run down by a motorcycle officer. And [many of us have] seen the sickening and grotesque photograph of Sri Louise, the woman who was shot in the jaw and neck.

The morning quiet was pierced by explosions as the Oakland Police Department opened fire on the crowd

"I want to make clear that the use of these types of weapons against peaceful protesters is unacceptable under any circumstances. However, it is also clear that the severity of the injuries we saw that day was significantly increased because the Oakland Police Department disregarded the manufacturers safety warnings and misused these weapons. For example, we recovered a shell casing used to fire wooden bullets. The casing indicated that it was manufactured by Federal Laboratories in Casper, Wyoming, and fires 264W wooden baton rounds. The casing includes a very clear warning, which states: 'Do not fire directly at persons or serious injury or death may result.' The warning then admonishes officers to fire the weapons at the ground, from which they are intended to ricochet into peoples' legs.

Continued on page 15

SEE RELATED ARTICLE PG. 4

Workers in Iran Fight Back!

Textile workers at the Behshahr' Chintz-making factory in Behshahr, Mazandaran Province, Iran staged an angry protest on April 16, 2003 against the withholding of their wages over the past 26 months. They were eventually joined by nearly 30,000 workers from textile and other sectors as well as the city's residents at large. The protesters faced harsh attacks by security forces, in which tear gas and other weapons were used against them.

Behshahr workers are not alone in their struggle for payment of delayed wages. According to the 2002 survey by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, at least one million workers in Iran have not been receiving their wages. Sit-ins, strike actions, demonstrations and blockage of roads are some of the methods used by protesting workers in their struggles against delayed payment of wages and for improved working conditions and better social and income security programs.

Workers in Iran are facing many challenges in their struggles for the realization of their rights and demands. One of the main barriers is the Islamic Republic of Iran's repressive and anti-worker labour law, policies and practices, which encompass lack of the right to organize free and independent workers' organizations and the right to strike, persecution of labour activists and political opponents, lay offs, cut

Tomorrow's Tactics: in the News

By P. Wingnut

Now that the war on Iraq is finished, Bush is already thinking about the next conquest: maybe Syria or Iran, or maybe somewhere else. Thus, it's already time for those opposed to a US empire to figure out our next move.

The state has become extremely skilled at limiting the effectiveness of traditional, predictable oppositional movements and actions. Tame mass marches are ignored, while ordinary militant street actions get you arrested or shot at with rubber and wooden bullets. Sometimes, the most effective tactics are disruptive actions that the state couldn't possibly imagine and thus won't know how to react to — surrealist, absurdist actions. Such actions are just too strange for the police to figure out what to do. Or maybe they aren't even clearly protest tactics at all — they are just things that massively disrupt business as usual, cause chaos, sow confusion, and gradually rot out the empire's ability to project power globally.

Here are a few examples, but really, you have to think up your own or else they won't work. Be creative and remember, if you're not having fun, you're not doing it right.

America's favorite problem solver: Duct Tape

It seems like every action these days has to have lock boxes. You know, pieces of pipe that people use to lock themselves together that have to be cut apart by the fire department. The problem is that the fire department is quickly learning how to handle the problem. The police magazines probably have whole articles written on this stuff by now, and maybe some company is making a "lock box cutter tool." Why should we support a whole industry?

What about introducing some other kinds of materials that are intended just to confuse the fuck out of the authorities. For instance, what about at the next blockade, everyone shows up with a box of duct tape and just goes at it. Taping doors, locks, access points, people to cars, cars to trees, people to trees, etc. A few layers of duct tape is surprisingly difficult to cut because it is so gummy. The gum gets stuck in knives. Maybe we could layer some wire in with the tape or something.

Or what about using those wide roles of shrink wrap that shipping companies use to seal boxes together.

Best of all, duct tape and plastic wrap look so good together, so relevant — they are the official government solution to the threat of chemical and biological weapons. When the cops arrive, you can just say you wanted to have some homeland security.

Fake fear cuts both ways

Excerpted from an article by Mitchel Cohen

The success of the New World Order depends upon crushing all eruptions of working class uprisings in the Gulf region, most visibly in Iran and Iraq, keeping them from spreading to other countries, breaking up the increasingly organized oil proletariat and replacing them with workers from even more desperate and unorganized areas of the world.

communications technology of the industry itself.

Iranian society during the revolutionary period was democratically run from the grassroots by decentralized popular committees (Komitehs or Shuraá) for approximately two years. These Shura formed in late 1978 in all sectors of society: the schools, the military and media, the oil industry, among the rural Kurds and in the civil service

April 10, 2003 against the wild waving of their wages over the past 26 months. They were eventually joined by nearly 30,000 workers from textile and other sectors as well as the city's residents at large. The protesters faced harsh attacks by security forces, in which tear gas and other weapons were used against them.

Behshahr workers are not alone in their struggle for payment of delayed wages. According to the 2002 survey by the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, at least one million workers in Iran have not been receiving their wages. Sit-ins, strike actions, demonstrations and blockage of roads are some of the methods used by protesting workers in their struggles against delayed payment of wages and for improved working conditions and better social and income security programs.

Workers in Iran are facing many challenges in their struggles for the realization of their rights and demands. One of the main barriers is the Islamic Republic of Iran's repressive and anti-worker labour law, policies and practices, which encompass lack of the right to organize free and independent workers' organizations and the right to strike, persecution of labour activists and political opponents, lay offs, cut backs, and privatizations and deregulations in pursuit of the "economic structural adjustment" policies of the international Monetary Fund, World Bank and global and national corporations.

CALIFORNIA'S ANTI-TERRORISM CENTER CAN'T DEFINE TERRORISM!

The spokesperson for the California Anti-Terrorism Intelligence Center — a state agency — can't define "terrorism." But the center did feel justified in implying to the Oakland Police that the April 7 Oakland Port protests would involve terrorist activity — most likely encouraging the OPD to fire shotguns and throw grenades at the peaceful protest.

When asked to define terrorism, spokesman Mike Van Winkle said, "I'm not sure where to go with that." But he was able to draw coherent, logical conclusions about terror: "You can make an easy kind of a link that, if you have a protest predictable oppositional movements and actions. Tame mass marches are ignored, while ordinary militant street actions get you arrested or shot at with rubber and wooden bullets. Sometimes, the most effective tactics

Excerpted from an article by Mitchel Cohen

The success of the New World Order depends upon crushing all eruptions of working class uprisings in the Gulf region, most visibly in Iran and Iraq, keeping them from spreading to other countries, breaking up the increasingly organized oil proletariat and replacing them with workers from even more desperate and unorganized areas of the world.

In 1991 within Iraq — as had been the case in Iran eleven years earlier — leftist-led uprisings were threatening to destabilize the centralized nation-state itself, with the potential to launch a powerful communist push throughout the region. Crushing those uprisings became a priority for the US and a main reason for the U.S. government's promotion, funding and arming of Iraq in its long war with Iran.

In 1978 and 1979 the Iranian revolution had bubbled up from the grassroots and ejected the Shah — the main supporter of Israel in the region and the U.S. government's military strongman in the Arab and Western Asian oil-producing world. One of the key features of the Iranian revolution — one not shown on American TV, which focused solely on the student takeovers in Iran's capital city, Teheran, and the taking of 52 hostages — was the rebellion of the oil workers, some 80,000 strong.

With the involvement of two million people living in oil towns, striking workers shut down the massive Iranian petroleum industry. "The U.S. engineered an attempt to get oil flowing again by staffing the fields and refineries with 10,000 naval cadets trained for this purpose. The oil workers' effort failed. The oil usual, cause chaos, sow confusion, and gradually rot out the empire's ability to project power globally.

Here are a few examples, but really, you have to think up your own or else they won't work. Be creative and remember, if you're not having communications technology of the industry itself.

Iranian society during the revolutionary period was democratically run from the grassroots by decentralized popular committees (Komitehs or Shuraá) for approximately two years. These Shura formed in late 1978 in all sectors of society: the schools, the military and media, the oil industry, among the rural Kurds and in the civil service as well as in local neighborhoods. Garbage collection, bread baking and distribution, education and publishing, munitions manufacture and international relations were some of the social activities that these radical democratic committees carried out. (Turner)

The Ayatollah Khomeini's aim in returning to Iran after the upsurge from his exile in Paris, was to reassert the power of the bazaari, the mullahs and the national bourgeoisie in Iran — the basis for his authority. In this way, the situation in Iran 24 years ago is very similar to that in Afghanistan under the Taliban. Even while declaring the United States to be "the Great Satan," the Islamic fundamentalist Khomeini crushed the neighborhood and workers' councils that were serving to democratize the society as well as the oil industry (to the consternation of the oil companies) by reactivating the Shah's SAVAK — the savage secret police that had been trained a generation earlier by Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf's father. To gain the upper hand over the Shura, Khomeini needed a means for galvanizing the country. This was accomplished by the war with neighboring Iraq which lasted for 8 long years, killing more than 1 million Iranian and Iraqi people.

The problem is that the fire department is quickly learning how to handle the problem. The police magazines probably have whole articles written on this stuff by now, and maybe some company is making a "lock box cutter tool." Why should we support a whole industry?

What about introducing some other kinds of materials that are intended just to confuse the fuck out of the authorities. For instance, what about at the next blockade, everyone shows up with a box of duct tape and just goes at it. Taping doors, locks, access points, people to cars, cars to trees, people to trees, etc. A few layers of duct tape is surprisingly difficult to cut because it is so gummy. The gum gets stuck in knives. Maybe we could layer some wire in with the tape or something.

Or what about using those wide roles of shrink wrap that shipping companies use to seal boxes together.

Best of all, duct tape and plastic wrap look so good together, so relevant — they are the official government solution to the threat of chemical and biological weapons. When the cops arrive, you can just say you wanted to have some homeland security.

Fake fear cuts both ways

With all the hype around SARS, and before that anthrax and even small pox, the average American is more than ready to believe in crazy health risks. Instead of trying to shut down, say, Bechtel by linking arms outside its front door, how about try something a little more interesting.

Picture this. A bunch of people wearing full white body protection suits and respirators emerge from a series of white vans. They have official looking picture ID badges, white buckets full of a fancy green colored soapy water and scrubby brooms. They tape off the Bechtel entrance with yellow caution tape and start soaping down all of the surfaces and posting official "Warning - Contamination Quarantine" stickers.

They probably shouldn't answer any questions or talk to anyone — just act official. At the very least, this is going to create chaos and confusion. At best, the building will be shut down until someone can figure out what is going on.

subjected to policies of the International Monetary Fund, World Bank and global and national corporations.

CALIFORNIA'S ANTI-TERRORISM CENTER CAN'T DEFINE TERRORISM!

The spokesperson for the California Anti-Terrorism Intelligence Center — a state agency — can't define "terrorism." But the center did feel justified in implying to the Oakland Police that the April 7 Oakland Port protests would involve terrorist activity — most likely encouraging the OPD to fire shotguns and throw grenades at the peaceful protest.

When asked to define terrorism, spokesman Mike Van Winkle said, "I'm not sure where to go with that." But he was able to draw coherent, logical conclusions about terror: "You can make an easy kind of a link that, if you have a protest group protesting a war where the cause that's being fought against is international terrorism, you might have terrorism at that (protest). You can almost argue that a protest against that is a terrorist act."

He continued: "I've heard terrorism described as anything that is violent or has an economic impact, and shutting down a port certainly would have an economic impact."

We here at Slingshot hope this guy (and the whole agency) gets removed for these comments — although we aren't holding our breath. According to this logic, any labor strike would be "terrorism" because it would have an "economic impact." Or how about a boycott against, say, non-dolphin safe tuna. Actually, pretty much any act — other than going to work — would be terrorism. Like perhaps, smoking pot, or calling in late for work so you can have sex again. Economic impact, you know. Haul 'em off to Guantanamo.

centralized nation-state itself, with the potential to launch a powerful communist push throughout the region. Crushing those uprisings became a priority for the US and a main reason for the U.S. government's promotion, funding and arming of Iraq in its long war with Iran.

In 1978 and 1979 the Iranian revolution had bubbled up from the grassroots and ejected the Shah — the main supporter of Israel in the region and the U.S. government's military strongman in the Arab and Western Asian oil-producing world. One of the key features of the Iranian revolution — one not shown on American TV, which focused solely on the student takeovers in Iran's capital city, Teheran, and the taking of 52 hostages — was the rebellion of the oil workers, some 80,000 strong.

With the involvement of two million people living in oil towns, striking workers shut down the massive Iranian petroleum industry. "The U.S. engineered an attempt to get oil flowing again by staffing the fields and refineries with 10,000 naval cadets trained for this purpose. The strikebreaking effort failed. The striking workers refused to send oil to Israel and South Africa. Yet through a strong, and intricate network of peoples' committees called Shura in Pharsi, oil products were distributed throughout Iran, though not to the Shah's military." (Terisa Turner in "The 1991 Gulf War and Popular Struggles.")

The Iranian oilworkers were irreplaceable in the dangerous and highly technical operations of the oil system. They immediately coordinated amongst themselves a national operation, using the organization and education and publishing, munitions manufacture and international relations were some of the social activities that these radical democratic committees carried out. (Turner)

The Ayatollah Khomeini's aim in returning to Iran after the upsurge from his exile in Paris, was to reassert the power of the bazaari, the mullahs and the national bourgeoisie in Iran — the basis for his authority. In this way, the situation in Iran 24 years ago is very similar to that in Afghanistan under the Taliban. Even while declaring the United States to be "the Great Satan," the Islamic fundamentalist Khomeini crushed the neighborhood and workers' councils that were serving to democratize the society as well as the oil industry (to the consternation of the oil companies) by reactivating the Shah's SAVAK — the savage secret police that had been trained a generation earlier by Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf's father. To gain the upper hand over the Shura, Khomeini needed a means for galvanizing the country. This was accomplished by the war with neighboring Iraq which lasted for 8 long years, killing more than 1 million Iranian and Iraqi people.

From Khomeini's position, the war between Iran and Iraq served as a means to defeat an insurgent working class movement at home. It enabled Khomeini to concentrate the power of the State in the hands of ultra-religious fanatics (an outcome welcomed by the U.S. government as the lesser of two evils, representing the longterm interests of the oilgarchy); and, from Saddam Hussein's position, the war served as a means to reap the material benefits of doing the U.S.'s bidding in the region and, similarly, to crush rising working class movements in Iraq, particularly around Basra, Nasria and Hilah where, for decades, there had been strong Stalinist as well as council communist movements, and among the Kurds in the North. The ruling clique in Iraq used U.S. aid to consolidate the power of Iraq's fascist state through the terror of Saddam's brownshirts — the Republican Guards.

For more background on the 1991 Iraq uprising see "Ten Days that Shook Iraq" at:

www.geocities.com/

nowar_buttheclasswar/Gulf_War.html

American is more than ready to believe in crazy health risks. Instead of trying to shut down, say, Bechtel by linking arms outside its front door, how about try something a little more interesting.

Picture this. A bunch of people wearing full white body protection suits and respirators emerge from a series of white vans. They have official looking picture ID badges, white buckets full of a fancy green colored soapy water and scrubby brooms. They tape off the Bechtel entrance with yellow caution tape and start soaping down all of the surfaces and posting official "Warning - Contamination Quarantine" stickers.

They probably shouldn't answer any questions or talk to anyone — just act official. At the very least, this is going to create chaos and confusion. At best, the building will be shut down until someone can figure out what is going on.

Is This What Regression Looks Like?

The INS, Special Registration and the US Patriot Act I & II

By: Puddin Snax

Did you know that the USA PATRIOT Act stands for Uniting and Strengthening America by Providing Appropriate Tools Required to Intercept and Obstruct Terrorism?

This set of laws is another chapter in the extreme anti-immigration that is happening every day in this country. Detentions, detainments, immigrant and political profiling are regular practices used by the INS in the name of anti-terrorism. Male immigrants over the age of 16, from North Korea and 24 countries in the Middle East, from Afghanistan to Pakistan to Iraq and Iran, are being asked to come in to their local INS office for special registration, where they are interrogated, being asked everything from "Do you like Saddam Hussein?" to "What mosque do you pray at?"

For instance, in December and January in LA., 400 immigrants many of them Iranian living in Southern California were detained for alleged visa irregularities after complying with the INS order. Families in telephone contact with the detainees stated that the detainees were forced to sleep standing up because of overcrowding, or on concrete floors. Some had been hosed down with cold water; some were denied adequate food or water. Thus far, the special registration process has led to deportation proceedings for approximately 5,400 of the 41,000 registered with over 1,700 being detained.

In 1996 a wave of extreme anti-immigration laws were passed through congress that forced all people who weren't naturalized citizens, that including people with green cards and people that had been living here since age one, to report to the INS if they have ever been convicted of a felony. Even if they have served jail time, they are then sent to detention centers and deported to their country of origin, some for crimes as minor as drug possession or fighting with their boyfriends. Many have been held since they were first taken in with no information on when they will be released or even what charges they are being held on.

Prisons are making $20-25 a day off of detainees as opposed to about $7-10 off of the general population because of the bloated INS budget. Many jails across the country are building new wings solely for the use of holding immigrant detainees, and are already making millions a year off of their current immigrant populations. This is a business venture for the prison industrial complex and a way for the regime to appear to be doing something to "make America safe again" while allocating funds to some of the most reactionary branches of the government.

Now we are in a throwback to American internment of citizens of Japanese origin with people arrested based solely on their country of member of, or provides material support, to a group that the United States has designated as a terrorist organization."

Sometimes I wonder, what are we doing, rather, what am I doing while all this is happening, throwing parties and living life as normal, while people are quietly being taken away and locked up, no explanation, no representation, nothing?

What can we do? What can you do?

Start by talking to everyone you know about what is going on and create an opposition climate, be outraged, and express it. Organize teach-ins, and public events to hear Muslim, South Asian, and Arabic immigrants speak who have been the targets of this oppression. Organize rallies and demos to demand that all detainees be set free, especially in front of special registration sites. Write letters to the editor of all your local papers, or make papers and write about it. Join and support the Blue Triangle Network an organization formed in opposition of the detentions of immigrants. You can find them at www.bluetriangle.org. Make media, change existing media to better represent what you think it should say. Whatever you do, do something; talk to people you know, talk to people you don't, because as we all know, if it isn't you yet, they will come for the rest of us next.

IMPERIAL AMBITION

Excerpt of essay by Noam Chomsky

...[In the wake of the US war on Iraq] [t]here is growing fear of US power, which is considered to be the greatest threat to peace in much of the world, probably by a large

The "imperial ambition" of the current power holders, as it is frankly called, has aroused shudders throughout the world, including the mainstream of the establishment at home. Elsewhere, of course, the reactions

Legal representation lasts only until the come in to their local INS office for special registration, where they are interrogated, being asked everything from "Do you like Saddam Hussein?" to "What mosque do you pray at?"

For instance, in December and January in L.A., 400 immigrants many of them Iranian living in Southern California were detained for alleged visa irregularities after complying with the INS order. Families in telephone contact with the detainees stated that the detainees were forced to sleep standing up because of overcrowding, or on concrete floors. Some had been hosed down with cold water; some were denied adequate food or water. Thus far, the special registration process has led to deportation proceedings for approximately 5,400 of the 41,000 registered with over 1,700 being detained.

Legal representation lasts only until the authorities find something wrong....

Many folks are being held and sent to county jails and detention centers across the country. Random people are being held based solely on their country of origin and are told that if they contact a lawyer it is an admittance of guilt. An updated INS document dealing with questions and answers about Special Registration states that legal representation is not necessary, but at your option you may be represented at your own expense. This legal representation lasts only until the authorities find something wrong with an individuals papers and then it does not exist at all. People are being held indefinitely. No one detained by the INS since September 11 has been charged with actual involvement in terrorist activity, yet President Bush declared that they "have hauled in about 2,400 of these terrorists, these killers." The government still hasn't divulged how many have been detained, deported, or under what charges they are being held.

they will be released or even what charges they are being held on.

Prisons are making $20-25 a day off of detainees as opposed to about $7-10 off of the general population because of the bloated INS budget. Many jails across the country are building new wings solely for the use of holding immigrant detainees, and are already making millions a year off of their current immigrant populations. This is a business venture for the prison industrial complex and a way for the regime to appear to be doing something to "make America safe again" while allocating funds to some of the most reactionary branches of the government.

Now we are in a throwback to American internment of citizens of Japanese origin with people arrested based solely on their country of origin.

For months, individuals inquired about the status of Patriot Act II and were told that no such legislation was being planned. It was not until a draft of the bill was leaked earlier this year, did we find out the wonderful new propositions.

Sect. 201 & 202: It would enhance the department's ability to deny releasing material on suspected terrorists in government custody through the Freedom of Information Act. It would also restrict FOIA requests on the EPA's worst case scenario reports which are referred to as "road maps for terrorists".

Sect. 301-306: Authorizes creation of a DNA database on "suspected terrorists", defined to include association with suspected terrorist groups or having supported any group designated as terrorist.

Sect. 405: Allows any suspected terrorist to be held before their trial without bail.

Sect. 501: Establishes that an American citizen could be expatriated "if he becomes a

it. Organize teach-ins, and public events to hear Muslim, South Asian, and Arabic immigrants speak who have been the targets of this oppression. Organize rallies and demos

IMPERIAL AMBITION

Excerpt of essay by Noam Chomsky

... [In the wake of the US war on Iraq] [t]here is growing fear of US power, which is considered to be the greatest threat to peace in much of the world, probably by a large majority. And with the technology of destruction now at hand, rapidly becoming more lethal and ominous, threat to peace means threat to survival.

Fear of the US government is not based solely on this invasion, but on the background from which it arises: An openly-declared determination to rule the world by force, the one dimension in which US power is supreme, and to make sure that there will never be any challenge to that domination. Preventive wars are to be fought at will: Preventive, not Pre-emptive. Whatever the justifications for pre-emptive war might sometimes be, they do not hold for the very different category of preventive war: the use of military force to eliminate an imagined or invented threat. The openly-announced goal is to prevent a challenge to the "power, position, and prestige of the United States." Such challenge, now or in the future, and any sign that it may emerge, will be met with overwhelming force by the rulers of the country that now apparently outspends the rest of the world combined on means of violence, and is forging new and very dangerous paths over near-unanimous world opposition: development of lethal weaponry in space, for example.

It is worth bearing in mind that the words I quoted above are not those of Dick Cheney or Donald Rumsfeld or other radical statist extremists now in charge. Rather, they are the words of the respected elder statesman Dean Acheson, 40 years ago, when he was a senior people you don't, because as we all know, if it isn't you yet, they will come for the rest of us next.

The "imperial ambition" of the current power holders, as it is frankly called, has aroused shudders throughout the world, including the mainstream of the establishment at home. Elsewhere, of course, the reactions are far more fearful, particularly among the traditional victims. They know too much history, the hard way, to be comforted by exalted rhetoric. They have heard enough of that over the centuries as they were being beaten by the club called "civilization." Just a few days ago, the head of the non-aligned movement, which includes the governments of most of the world's population, described the Bush administration as more aggressive than Hitler. He happens to be very pro-American, and right in the middle of Washington's international economic projects. And there is little doubt that he speaks for many of the traditional victims, and by now even for many of their traditional oppressors.

It is easy to go on, and important to think these matters through, with care and honesty.

Even before the Bush administration sharply escalated these fears in recent months, intelligence and international affairs specialists were informing anyone who wanted to listen that the policies Washington is pursuing are likely to lead to an increase in terror and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, for revenge or simply deterrence. There are two ways for Washington to respond to the threats engendered by its actions and startling proclamations. One way is to try to alleviate the threats by paying some attention to legitimate grievances, and by agreeing to become a civilized member of a world community, with some respect for world order and its institutions. The other way is to

Many folks are being held and sent to county jails and detention centers across the country. Random people are being held based solely on their country of origin and are told that if they contact a lawyer it is an admittance of guilt. An updated INS document dealing with questions and answers about Special Registration states that legal representation is not necessary, but at your option you may be represented at your own expense. This legal representation lasts only until the authorities find something wrong with an individuals papers and then it does not exist at all. People are being held indefinitely. No one detained by the INS since September 11 has been charged with actual involvement in terrorist activity, yet President Bush declared that they "have hauled in about 2,400 of these terrorists, these killers." The government still hasn't divulged how many have been detained, deported, or under what charges they are being held.

For months, individuals inquired about the status of Patriot Act II and were told that no such legislation was being planned. It was not until a draft of the bill was leaked earlier this year, did we find out the wonderful new propositions.

Sect. 201 & 202: It would enhance the department's ability to deny releasing material on suspected terrorists in government custody through the Freedom of Information Act. It would also restrict FOIA requests on the EPA's worst case scenario reports which are referred to as "road maps for terrorists".

Sect. 301-306: Authorizes creation of a DNA database on "suspected terrorists", defined to include association with suspected terrorist groups or having supported any group designated as terrorist.

Sect. 405: Allows any suspected terrorist to be held before their trial without bail.

Sect. 501: Establishes that an American citizen could be expatriated "if he becomes a threat to survival. Fear of the US government is not based solely on this invasion, but on the background from which it arises: An openly-declared determination to rule the world by force, the one dimension in which US power is supreme, and to make sure that there will never be any challenge to that domination. Preventive wars are to be fought at will: Preventive, not Pre-emptive. Whatever the justifications for pre-emptive war might sometimes be, they do not hold for the very different category of preventive war: the use of military force to eliminate an imagined or invented threat. The openly-announced goal is to prevent a challenge to the "power, position, and prestige of the United States." Such challenge, now or in the future, and any sign that it may emerge, will be met with overwhelming force by the rulers of the country that now apparently outspends the rest of the world combined on means of violence, and is forging new and very dangerous paths over near-unanimous world opposition: development of lethal weaponry in space, for example.

It is worth bearing in mind that the words I quoted above are not those of Dick Cheney or Donald Rumsfeld or other radical statist extremists now in charge. Rather, they are the words of the respected elder statesman Dean Acheson, 40 years ago, when he was a senior advisor to the Kennedy Administration. He was justifying US actions against Cuba - knowing that the international terrorist campaign aimed at "regime change" had just brought the world close to terminal nuclear war. Nevertheless, he instructed the American Society of International Law, no "legal issue" arises in the case of a US response to a challenge to its "power, position, and prestige," specifically terrorist attacks and economic warfare against Cuba.

I bring this up as a reminder that the issues are deep-seated. The current administration is at the extremist end of the policy-planning spectrum, and its adventurism and penchant for violence are unusually dangerous. But the spectrum is not that broad, and unless these deeper issues are addressed, we can be confident that other ultrareactionary extremists will gain control of incredible means of devastation and repression.

threat to survival. They have heard enough of that over the centuries as they were being beaten by the club called "civilization." Just a few days ago, the head of the non-aligned movement, which includes the governments of most of the world's population, described the Bush administration as more aggressive than Hitler. He happens to be very pro-American, and right in the middle of Washington's international economic projects. And there is little doubt that he speaks for many of the traditional victims, and by now even for many of their traditional oppressors.

It is easy to go on, and important to think these matters through, with care and honesty.

Even before the Bush administration sharply escalated these fears in recent months, intelligence and international affairs specialists were informing anyone who wanted to listen that the policies Washington is pursuing are likely to lead to an increase in terror and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, for revenge or simply deterrence. There are two ways for Washington to respond to the threats engendered by its actions and startling proclamations. One way is to try to alleviate the threats by paying some attention to legitimate grievances, and by agreeing to become a civilized member of a world community, with some respect for world order and its institutions. The other way is to construct even more awesome engines of destruction and domination, so that any perceived challenge, however remote, can be crushed - provoking new and greater challenges. That way poses serious dangers to the people of the US and the world, and may, very possibly, lead to extinction of the species - not an idle speculation.

Terminal nuclear war has been avoided by near miracle in the past; a few months before Acheson's speech, to mention one case that should be fresh in our minds today. Threats are severe and mounting. The world has good reason to watch what is happening in Washington with fear and trepidation. The people who are best placed to relieve those fears, and to lead the way to a more hopeful and constructive future, are the citizens of the United States, who can shape the future.

War resistance

Wandering the Winter Wonderland Against the War

Want action? Staying home won't make it happen

By I Steve

After residing in Minneapolis, Minnesota for several months, I made a cameo appearance in Milwaukee, followed by a week in New Orleans, before visiting the Bay Area. I attended anti-war demonstrations in all of these cities, and made several observations on the way of the dying republic and emerging empire.

Minneapolis

It wasn't until winter set, and it sunk in that the president was serious, that the movement expanded beyond the sectarian groups and core activist culture. Before this, the message of the protesters marching in circles was pacifism; that war is always bad and shouldn't happen. While of course pacifists should get out and speak their mind, I was concerned whether the message was getting to most Americans that this particular war was

Action Account: The hump-in

Gay Shame — the militant queer action cluster — recently elevated street tactics to a new level during an anti-war demonstration in San Francisco. The crowd was massive and bored, marching down the street like cattle in typical ANSWER fashion. Amongst the gloom, Gay Shame's bullhorn was spewing brilliant, sexy free-association chants and propaganda as fast as they could think of them. Suddenly, the Metreon theater complex was down the street, and the Gay Shame bullhorner was screaming "let's hump the Metreon to stop the war." The group charged up to the thick metallic columns at the entrance, surrounding them with gyrating pelvic thrusts. Then, someone noticed that a Starbucks was across the street. Everyone had a collective Seattle WTO flashback.

The bullhorn rang out "hump Starbucks!" Seconds later, all the large plate glass windows

From

What can we

By P. Wingnut

Living in the Homeland of Empire USA was depressing during the war against Iraq, but at least in the San Francisco Bay Area we could take a little heart in all the dedicated, powerful, militant and exciting anti-war protests. The day after the bombs started dropping, we lived up to our pledge to shut down San Francisco's financial district. The action started at 6 a.m. and lasted until late at night as thousands of people ran circles around confused, impotent police. Vigorous protest continued for days after, with 2,500 people arrested over 3 days.

We need to remember the lessons we learned that first day and during the rest of the war — both in terms of actions that slowed down business as usual, and tactics that were ineffective.

The struggle has moved beyond the time for polite protests and "petitioning our elected leaders". The men ruling the US empire are less and less interested in public opinion. For them, might makes right. Increasingly, the only way to stop their drive to empire, their wars, their domination of the earth, and their suppression of freedom is to make their rule physically impossible in the streets.

Direct action or withdrawal from cooperation aimed at stopping the economy, the military and the government from functioning are increasingly crucial in the face

Want action? Staying home won't make it happen

By I Steve

After residing in Minneapolis, Minnesota for several months, I made a cameo appearance in Milwaukee, followed by a week in New Orleans, before visiting the Bay Area. I attended anti-war demonstrations in all of these cities, and made several observations on the way of the dying republic and emerging empire.

Minneapolis

It wasn't until winter set, and it sunk in that the president was serious, that the movement expanded beyond the sectarian groups and core activist culture. Before this, the message of the protesters marching in circles was pacifism; that war is always bad and shouldn't happen. While of course pacifists should get out and speak their mind, I was concerned whether the message was getting to most Americans that this particular war was ludicrously short of any standard of justification.

The movement that arose in winter was all about "ordinary people" standing up and being counted. Minneapolis participated in the worldwide protest days with crowds of ten thousand. Lawn signs against the war appeared throughout residential neighborhoods, proclaiming "Say NO to War in Iraq. Call your congresspeople." The creators of the signs felt that even in this rather progressive city, the media had made the upcoming war seem so normal, popular and reasonable that ordinary people had to really struggle to bring the anti-war position out of the margins.

As wartime grew closer, counter-demonstrations grew in size and significance, and "Liberate Iraq" lawn signs appeared in identical style.

Inspired by rumors from San Francisco, some people sought to organize a disruptive day after action, but the plan was reduced by least common denominator consensus to ordinary civil disobedience.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

People in Milwaukee tell me they don't go to protests there because they are small and disempowering (yes, I realize that's backwards). But the turnout at the recruiting center just off campus wasn't so bad. The

Action Account: The hump-in

Gay Shame — the militant queer action cluster — recently elevated street tactics to a new level during an anti-war demonstration in San Francisco. The crowd was massive and bored, marching down the street like cattle in typical ANSWER fashion. Amongst the gloom, Gay Shame's bullhorn was spewing brilliant, sexy free-association chants and propaganda as fast as they could think of them. Suddenly, the Metreon theater complex was down the street, and the Gay Shame bullhorneer was screaming "let's hump the Metreon to stop the war." The group charged up to the thick metallic columns at the entrance, surrounding them with gyrating pelvic thrusts. Then, someone noticed that a Starbucks was across the street. Everyone had a collective Seattle WTO flashback.

The bullhorn rang out "hump Starbucks!" Seconds later, all the large plate glass windows were shaking as the Gay Shame marchers took down their pants and made love to the cold glass surface. It looked like the glass might break from the exertion. The scene must have been intense for the surprised coffee addicts inside. The movement's newest tactic in the struggle for liberation had been unleashed — the hump-in. —PB

France protests war

No "freedom" fries here, Maurice

By Gerrard Winstanley

Here in Paris the response to the war was loud but tame in comparison to the response in the Bay Area and in other countries with more obvious military involvement in the war. Unfortunately, framing America as the "bad guy" has been very successful here and distracts people from a more fundamental understanding of the role of international capital in general in the pursuit of profits at the cost of human misery. The ignorance and short-sightedness of the U.S. public is most often seen as only a national phenomenon, and the trends toward media monopolization and spectacular consumption here are blamed on "cultural" domination of the United States and not on the real culprit: the increasingly desperate needs of global capitalism.

Meanwhile, aside from the slogans of the ultra-left, the interests of the French state dictatorship in the Ivory Coast.) The national security state, under the leadership of interior minister Sarkozy, who is well-placed to make a run for the presidency in the next election, has grown tremendously since 9/11 and Giuliani-style repression has been on the rise in every aspect of daily life — from the targeting of fare-evaders on the Metro to the huge number of arrests of Roma people, the increasing eviction of squatters, the increase in the hours that people can be legally detained without charges (and a lowering of the age for which this is allowed), and the explosion of prison construction throughout the country.

But of course there is resistance, and I have noticed a passion for justice here among younger people (I'm talking high-schoolers) that is inspiring. At a 40,000 strong demonstration at the Place Concorde the first down San Francisco's financial district. The action started at 6 a.m. and lasted until late at night as thousands of people ran circles around confused, impotent police. Vigorous protest continued for days after, with 2,500 people arrested over 3 days.

We need to remember the lessons we learned that first day and during the rest of the war — both in terms of actions that slowed down business as usual, and tactics that were ineffective.

The struggle has moved beyond the time for polite protests and "petitioning our elected leaders". The men ruling the US empire are less and less interested in public opinion. For them, might makes right. Increasingly, the only way to stop their drive to empire, their wars, their domination of the earth, and their suppression of freedom is to make their rule physically impossible in the streets.

Direct action or withdrawal from cooperation aimed at stopping the economy, the military and the government from functioning are increasingly crucial in the face of Bush's New World Order. In this struggle, our friend is disruption, not orderly cooperation with the police. Our actions need to be measured by our disruptiveness, spontaneity, decentralization, individual initiative and creativity.

Pre-planning and organization are good if they impair the system's functioning, but organization for its own sake — especially when it produces scripted, compliant protest and merely symbolic "actions" — is not going to get the job done. Excessive emphasis on pre-organization will make our opposition bureaucratic — with leader figures who can be coopted, negotiated with or bought into irrelevance.

Conversely, now isn't the time to succumb to fantasies that we can engage in armed about "ordinary people" standing up and being counted. Minneapolis participated in the worldwide protest days with crowds of ten thousand. Lawn signs against the war appeared throughout residential neighborhoods, proclaiming "Say NO to War in Iraq. Call your congresspeople." The creators of the signs felt that even in this rather progressive city, the media had made the upcoming war seem so normal, popular and reasonable that ordinary people had to really struggle to bring the anti-war position out of the margins.

As wartime grew closer, counter-demonstrations grew in size and significance, and "Liberate Iraq" lawn signs appeared in identical style.

Inspired by rumors from San Francisco, some people sought to organize a disruptive day after action, but the plan was reduced by least common denominator consensus to ordinary civil disobedience.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

People in Milwaukee tell me they don't go to protests there because they are small and disempowering (yes, I realize that's backwards). But the turnout at the recruiting center just off campus wasn't so bad. The kids put it on; no serious organizations were involved, except a Unitarian minister who was a police liaison. Although the group steered clear of literal disruption or law breaking, they were feisty enough that the police wanted to declare an unlawful assembly anyway. No one took the threat seriously.

If all of Milwaukee's odd cultural elements cooperated they might have quite a resistance. Maybe next century.

Meeting the War God in Andrew Jackson's Square

An anti-war march in the French Quarter (yes, they seriously proposed re-naming it the Freedom Quarter) was rather reminiscent of a Mardi Gras parade in Berkeley. As we dipped briefly into the Central Business District and up Decatur Street, big jock looking tourists were screaming and cursing at us. I wondered about the masses of people in opinion polls. Were they all ogres like these, or were there

Continued on page 15

France protests war

No "freedom" fries here, Maurice

By Gerrard Winstanley

Here in Paris the response to the war was loud but tame in comparison to the response in the Bay Area and in other countries with more obvious military involvement in the war. Unfortunately, framing America as the "bad guy" has been very successful here and distracts people from a more fundamental understanding of the role of international capital in general in the pursuit of profits at the cost of human misery. The ignorance and short-sightedness of the U.S. public is most often seen as only a national phenomenon, and the trends toward media monopolization and spectacular consumption here are blamed on "cultural" domination of the United States and not on the real culprit: the increasingly desperate needs of global capitalism.

Meanwhile, aside from the slogans of the ultra-left, the interests of the French state and the economic interests it seeks to protect in the Middle East are generally ignored. (Not to mention the overt support of the racist dictatorship in the Ivory Coast.) The national security state, under the leadership of interior minister Sarkozy, who is well-placed to make a run for the presidency in the next election, has grown tremendously since 9/11 and Giuliani-style repression has been on the rise in every aspect of daily life — from the targeting of fare-evaders on the Metro to the huge number of arrests of Roma people, the increasing eviction of squatters, the increase in the hours that people can be legally detained without charges (and a lowering of the age for which this is allowed), and the explosion of prison construction throughout the country.

But of course there is resistance, and I have noticed a passion for justice here among younger people (I'm talking high-schoolers) that is inspiring. At a 40,000 strong demonstration at the Place Concorde the first night of the war (the site of the U.S. embassy) the place was seriously rocking, and a radical, internationalist spirit prevailed over the small groups of national flag wavers and other assorted creeps. But beyond a few scuffles and a few broken windows during the spontaneous march, things stayed relatively tame. A few days into the war over 100,000 people hit the streets again, and one of the better shouts I heard was: "Ni Saddam, Ni Uncle Sam! Guerre mondiale, contre le Capital!" (no to Saddam, no to Uncle Sam World War against capital). One especially appropriate sign read "One sole non-revolutionary week-end is infinitely more bloody than a month of permanent revolution," a reprise of graffiti from May 1968.

Keep up the pressure in the Bay Area brothers and sisters!

—PB
to be measured by our disruptiveness, spontaneity, decentralization, individual initiative and creativity.

Pre-planning and organization are good if they impair the system's functioning, but organization for its own sake — especially when it produces scripted, compliant protest and merely symbolic "actions" — is not going to get the job done. Excessive emphasis on pre-organization will make our opposition bureaucratic — with leader figures who can be coopted, negotiated with or bought into irrelevance.

Conversely, now isn't the time to succumb to fantasies that we can engage in armed struggle within the US against the US empire. In the war on Iraq, the regular Iraqi military units didn't stand a chance against the better armed imperial troops. Those Iraqi units were better armed than any opposition group in the US could hope to be.

Organized and spontaneous civil disruption at home is far more threatening to an empire than either polite, predictable protest or armed resistance. The cops have a hard time crushing non-compliance and disruption, which gradually rots the capacity of an empire to project its military and ecological domination abroad.

Our movement is quickly being pushed into a resistance movement against an imperial power. The forces building the American empire have made it clear that domestic opponents of the regime may be labeled terrorists or "enemy combatants" and thus stripped of any formal legal "rights" accorded to obedient citizens. Even though we're in our protest to disruption learn from the recent campaign to shut down business as usual?

Round-up

own homes, living in the United States means we're operating in occupied enemy territory.

What Worked

As the day dawned in San Francisco on Thursday, March 21, small groups of unusual looking commuters began emerging from downtown subway stations, along with the usual crowd wearing their ties and skirts, briefcases in hand. The night before in Iraq, US cruise missiles had started raining down, opening an unjustified, preemptive war of aggression. The People had come to a financial nerve center of the empire to stop business as usual.

The action to shut down San Francisco had been planned for months, with hundreds of affinity groups assembling detailed, specific action plans. But many more people came downtown without precise plans — just the notion that something had to happen.

The organized affinity groups quickly threw up blockades at numerous pre-determined points. Because the location of these blockades had been announced in advance, the police were well prepared. Almost as soon as a blockade was established, it was surrounded by swarms of police.

This created an amazing opportunity for the thousands of folks who weren't involved in pre-organized actions to seize control of the rest of the city. There weren't enough police to simultaneously surround numerous pre-all morning as intersection after intersection was blockaded at random. The police didn't know what might happen next or where. The cops would get a report of a disturbance, dispatch officers, and by the time they reached the intersection, the problem would have moved elsewhere. Such unpredictable, spontaneous disruption is far more threatening to the system than a stationary, pre-organized, controlled or largely symbolic action.

As the day and the war continued, the police cracked down harder and harder. Opportunities that were available early on became impossible later. Moreover, in the days after March 21, the media viciously criticized the financial district shutdown. "Blocking ordinary people on their way to work just hurts the anti-war cause." These reactions from the police and the media just proved how effective the effort to disrupt business as usual had been. This proved that our actions threatened social stability and couldn't just be ignored. The massive marches leading up to the war were beautiful, diverse, and heartening, but they didn't threaten social order, and could thus easily be ignored.

Bike cavalry to the Rescue!

Another totally inspiring and amazing tactical innovation during the March 21 San Francisco shutdown was the application of critical mass bicycle tactics to militant load of food, water and other supplies to people on foot. The bikes could scout ahead, warn of approaching danger, and distribute information about which roads were already blocked and which ones were waiting to be shut down. The one disadvantage of being on a bike is that it can be hard to dismount and change your role, because you have to do something with your bike. Thus, the bikes were most effective when they cooperated with folks on foot, each doing what they did best.

It was especially excellent to see all of the bikes, given that the war on Iraq was fought in part to enable Americans to drive as much as they want using cheap, foreign oil. During the brief war, spontaneous mini-critical masses calling themselves "Bikes Not Bombs" roamed San Francisco every weeknight, maintaining the momentum of protest. In a period of empire and war to maintain a dying motorized mode of transportation, riding a bike became our silent, daily protests against oil wars.

What Didn't work

Police arrested about 2,500 people in San Francisco during the first 3 days of the war. Some of those arrested had "meant" to risk arrest at pre-organized blockades. But a lot of other folks got arrested — swept up and arrested en masse — the first day by accident because they tried to march in a black bloc.

We need to look critically at the black bloc tactic and figure out if it has outlived its and seeing a bunch of punks in black with face masks looks tough and militant. But if the group is singled out, monitored more closely by the cops, and thus can't actually do anything, what is the point of looking cool? In Seattle, while the media and the police followed the small black bloc with helicopters, a much larger "plaid" block was able to get a lot of jobs done.

Face masks bring a certain level of militancy to a crowd, but they also can look unnecessarily scary and serve to separate those in the streets from the public at large. We want to inspire ordinary folks to struggle with us against the system, not convince them that we're spoiled children with criminal tendencies. A lot of times you see face masks when nothing is even going on at all — what the fuck?!

I thought the white face masks printed with "no war on Iraq" were pretty damn cool and a lot easier to understand. The point is to cover your face if you're going to do something illegal, or if you might later on, not to just wear one all the time like it's jewelry!

A lot more thinking, discussion and debate needs to go on within the community about the black bloc (and every other tactic we use). Far too often it seems like folks are just doing what they've done before, or seen done before, without actually thinking about what is going to be effective.

Finally, one the worst protest mistakes I saw during the war happened at a large and nerve center of the empire to stop business as usual.

The action to shut down San Francisco had been planned for months, with hundreds of affinity groups assembling detailed, specific action plans. But many more people came downtown without precise plans — just the notion that something had to happen.

The organized affinity groups quickly threw up blockades at numerous pre-determined points. Because the location of these blockades had been announced in advance, the police were well prepared. Almost as soon as a blockade was established, it was surrounded by swarms of police.

This created an amazing opportunity for the thousands of folks who weren't involved in pre-organized actions to seize control of the rest of the city. There weren't enough police to simultaneously surround numerous pre-organized blockades and protect the rest of the city. At intersection after intersection throughout the downtown, there were no police in sight.

It only took 20 people holding hands to block a street and attract another 100 folks who were on the sidewalk out into the street. If the police came around in sufficient numbers to threaten one of these un-planned actions, the participants could simply melt back onto the sidewalk, only to reappear somewhere else where there were no police a few minutes later.

These blockades were short-term cat and mouse operations where the intent was to avoid arrest rather than to seek it. While it's hard to know, it felt like the un-planned and roving blockades were able to stop business as usual at least as effectively as the larger pre-planned actions. The difference was that those who did pre-planned actions got arrested fairly quickly and now face court dates. Few people involved in roving blockades got arrested, so they were free to disrupt the city long after their pre-organized comrades had been removed, even once more police got freed up from the large pre-planned blockades.

What does this mean for the future? A lot of activists like sitting in meetings polishing plans for pre-organized actions. That's fine — as long as the movement doesn't conclude that those pre-organized actions alone will be enough to disrupt a target. Pre-organized actions often don't create much real disruption — the police love it when they know precisely where all the activists are and have them cracked down harder and harder. Opportunities that were available early on became impossible later. Moreover, in the days after March 21, the media viciously criticized the financial district shutdown. "Blocking ordinary people on their way to work just hurts the anti-war cause." These reactions from the police and the media just proved how effective the effort to disrupt business as usual had been. This proved that our actions threatened social stability and couldn't just be ignored. The massive marches leading up to the war were beautiful, diverse, and heartening, but they didn't threaten social order, and could thus easily be ignored.

Bike cavalry to the Rescue!

Another totally inspiring and amazing tactical innovation during the March 21 San Francisco shutdown was the application of critical mass bicycle tactics to militant disruptive street protest. It is fitting that bicyclists finally realized their full potential as bikes, given that the war on Iraq was fought in part to enable Americans to drive as much as they want using cheap, foreign oil. During the brief war, spontaneous mini-critical masses calling themselves "Bikes Not Bombs" roamed San Francisco every weeknight, maintaining the momentum of protest. In a period of empire and war to maintain a dying motorized mode of transportation, riding a bike became our silent, daily protests against oil wars.

What Didn't work

Police arrested about 2,500 people in San Francisco during the first 3 days of the war. Some of those arrested had "meant" to risk arrest at pre-organized blockades. But a lot of other folks got arrested — swept up and arrested en masse — the first day by accident because they tried to march in a black bloc.

We need to look critically at the black bloc tactic and figure out if it has outlived its usefulness. The black bloc tactic originated in Europe in the 1980s, and folks have marched in militant street fighters in San Francisco, where critical mass was born.

Critical mass bike rides, which have spread to hundreds of cities around the world, are usually good natured, fun, non-confrontational celebrations of bicycling. Since there is no organized "leadership" of critical mass, there a black bloc in the Bay Area since the late 1980s, if not before. The idea is to have a large number of militant people in a large block so they can protect themselves and be disruptive. People dress alike (in black) so that the police can't pick out a particular person from a crowd and try to pin a inspire ordinary folks to struggle with us against the system, not convince them that we're spoiled children with criminal tendencies. A lot of times you see face masks when nothing is even going on at all — what the fuck?!!

I thought the white face masks printed with "no war on Iraq" were pretty damn cool and a lot easier to understand. The point is to cover your face if you're going to do something illegal, or if you might later on, not to just wear one all the time like it's jewelry!

A lot more thinking, discussion and debate needs to go on within the community about the black bloc (and every other tactic we use). Far too often it seems like folks are just doing what they've done before, or seen done before, without actually thinking about what is going to be effective.

Finally, one the worst protest mistakes I saw during the war happened at a large and spirited blockade of the Chevron headquarters in San Ramon. The action, starting at 6 a.m. way out in the suburbs, was a triumph of pre-organization. Somehow, hundreds of us made it out there on crazy hipster shuttle school buses from the subway station in Walnut Creek. There were two roads going into the headquarters campus with large groups blocking both of them.

Although the action couldn't have happened without a lot of pre-organization, it ended up demonstrating the limitations of pre-organization, and the tendency of pre-organized actions to become bureaucratic, predictable, tame, and ultimately non-disruptive and ineffective.

At the gate where I was, people were stopping cars, but the police were just parking workers a distance away and walking them in. Some people were trying to block the pedestrians, and the "organizers" were doing everything they could to stop participants from being spontaneous, effective and thinking for themselves. The "leader" on hand with the bullhorn told us that we had to "obey" the decisions of the spokescouncil and that he wanted to make sure the picket and the blockade were "orderly."

I knew it was all over when the police came over a bullhorn and told people to be quiet so our "leader" could make an announcement. The "leader" told us to get out of the road or we would be arrested. People complied immediately, even though it was quite clear that the police had neither the numbers nor the inclination to actually remove a large, fluid

It only took 20 people holding hands to block a street and attract another 100 folks who were on the sidewalk out into the street. If the police came around in sufficient numbers to threaten one of these un-planned actions, the participants could simply melt back onto the sidewalk, only to reappear somewhere else where there were no police a few minutes later.

These blockades were short-term cat and mouse operations where the intent was to avoid arrest rather than to seek it. While it's hard to know, it felt like the un-planned and roving blockades were able to stop business as usual at least as effectively as the larger pre-planned actions. The difference was that those who did pre-planned actions got arrested fairly quickly and now face court dates. Few people involved in roving blockades got arrested, so they were free to disrupt the city long after their pre-organized comrades had been removed, even once more police got freed up from the large pre-planned blockades.

What does this mean for the future? A lot of activists like sitting in meetings polishing plans for pre-organized actions. That's fine — as long as the movement doesn't conclude that those pre-organized actions alone will be enough to disrupt a target. Pre-organized actions often don't create much real disruption — the police love it when they know precisely where all the activists are and have them surrounded with a double line of riot cops. We shouldn't delude ourselves into believing that we've disrupted business as usual merely because we've blocked an intersection — if the police know which intersection we've blocked, we haven't seriously threatened social stability or order.

The pre-organized actions can act as decoys — diverting police attention and opening space for other activists to achieve a higher level of disruption elsewhere. Just like police love knowing where all the activists are, they fear a scenario in which they have no idea where all of the participants are, or are heading next. It's even worse for the police when there are 50 autonomous groups moving in all directions all at the same time.

On March 21, the police and media struggled militant street fighters in San Francisco, where critical mass was born.

Critical mass bike rides, which have spread to hundreds of cities around the world, are usually good natured, fun, non-confrontational celebrations of bicycling. Since there is no organized "leadership" of critical mass, there is no organized political message or demands.

It is precisely these cultural traditions that helped cyclists on March 21 be so effective and disruptive. The bicyclists were used to making quick decisions on the fly without any formal organization or leadership.

When pre-planned blockades pinned down most of the police during the morning, numerous bands of roving cyclists were able to ride around at will, tying up and slowing traffic for miles. Since bikes can move rapidly, they were an even more confusing and disruptive problem for the cops and the media. They could be everywhere and nowhere simultaneously. Over and over, folks blocking intersections at random on foot would suddenly be reinforced by a roving band of bicyclists. The bikes also brought load after a black bloc in the Bay Area since the late 1980s, if not before. The idea is to have a large number of militant people in a large block so they can protect themselves and be disruptive. People dress alike (in black) so that the police can't pick out a particular person from a crowd and try to pin a particular crime on them.

While at some points this tactic might make sense, recently marching in black has seemed to have more to do with making a fashion statement than trying to act collectively and effectively. Rather than allowing people to avoid police detection and arrest, the police have gone after the black bloc because they are wearing black, whether they do anything or not. The black bloc was surrounded and all its members arrested the weekend before the war — and then because no one seemed to learn anything, the exact same thing happened again the day after the war started.

Under these conditions, our tactics need to evolve. The point is to be disruptive and not get caught, not ensure that you're going to get taken into custody. I realize black looks cool, hundreds of us made it out there on crazy hipster shuttle school buses from the subway station in Walnut Creek. There were two roads going into the headquarters campus with large groups blocking both of them.

Although the action couldn't have happened without a lot of pre-organization, it ended up demonstrating the limitations of pre-organization, and the tendency of pre-organized actions to become bureaucratic, predictable, tame, and ultimately non-disruptive and ineffective.

At the gate where I was, people were stopping cars, but the police were just parking workers a distance away and walking them in. Some people were trying to block the pedestrians, and the "organizers" were doing everything they could to stop participants from being spontaneous, effective and thinking for themselves. The "leader" on hand with the bullhorn told us that we had to "obey" the decisions of the spokescouncil and that he wanted to make sure the picket and the blockade were "orderly."

I knew it was all over when the police came over a bullhorn and told people to be quiet so our "leader" could make an announcement. The "leader" told us to get out of the road or we would be arrested. People complied immediately, even though it was quite clear that the police had neither the numbers nor the inclination to actually remove a large, fluid group from the road. That left the pre-appointed people willing to "risk arrest" sitting in a thin line, defenseless against the police who politely took them into custody. The potential disruption of the hundreds of people on hand was dismantled by one unelected "leader" cooperating with the police. Everyone stood on the sidewalk and watched the police carry out their duty.

We need to keep in mind that when we organize, we should be doing it for our own goals. Helping the police maintain order should never be one of our goals. Organizing to get a large group outside of a corporation is an excellent goal. Then the organizers need to fade away and trust the People to take responsibility for our own actions and our own future.

ARE WE SMASH

GOING TO CAPITALISM

Join the tunic bloc!

D.M.O.O.P.

D. MOOP.

OR JUST LET THESE FACTORIES KILL THE EARTH?

REPORTERA

PÁGINA EN ESPAÑOL

Preso Politico en la Ciudad de Mexico

Tiempo de Oportunidad:

Tomala!!!

El joven Anarquist@ Mexicano Carlos Alberto Estrada Arroyo fue recientemente sentenciado a 12 y 1/2 años de cárcel por un presunto robo que el no cometiese. El 14 de Mayo, del 2001, Carlos estaba regresando del almuerzo a su trabajo de albañil en la Ciudad de Mexico, cuando fue arrestado por la policia. Despues fue golpeado y torturado. Apesar de haber pasado mas de dos años en prision el sigue desmintiendo los cargos y declarandose inocente. Carlos es un joven libertario quien estaba envuelto en actividades politicas dentro del movimiento anarquista y punk de la ciudad de Mexico, incluyendo la combativa huelga estudiantil de la UNAM en 99-2000

Carlos y su familia estan muy agradecidos por el apoyo internacional que el ha recibido incluyendo ayuda de Argentina, Brasil, USA, Francia, Italia, España y Polonia. Su madre Sara Arroyo Granados escribe: "Estoy escribiendo para agradecerles por el apoyo economico y moral que han sido ofrecidos a mi hijo"

por PB Floyd

Traduzido por Rebeca Walker-Marquez

En el periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra de Estados Unidos contra Irak, algunos de quienes se oponen al imperio militar mundial estadounidense se sienten desalentados y aislados.

Esto es un grave error, en este periodo inestable hay oportunidades tremendas para avanzar en la lucha contra el capitalismo y sus ignorar sus manifestaciones pacíficas.

La desilusión de millones de personas que no pudieron parar la guerra mediante manifestaciones pacíficas puede ir en dos direcciones: o bien la gente se orillará hacia la apatía y el silencio, o bien se radicalizarán y comenzarán a darse cuenta de que la única manera de parar la tendencia del sistema hacia el asesinato masivo, consiste en encontrar maneras para irrumpir, resistir y luchar contra el sistema. Si el sistema no escucha a la gente, aire.

Esta ruptura histórica puede abrir camino hacia un cambio social masivo. La dirección de ese cambio es desconocida y todas las partes desean aprovechar el momento y promover sus propios objetivos. Depende del movimiento contra la guerra, y particularmente de los radicales y antiautoritarios dentro del mismo, el asegurarse de que el cambio en este periodo de inestabilidad sea positivo, no negativo.

Ahora estamos en un momento crucial para organizarnos, continuar la lucha, enfatizar las lecciones aprendidas y dirigir a las personas y organizaciones que fueron movilizadas por la guerra de un movimiento reactivo frente a la guerra hacia una lucha por algo nuevo. Es crucial, en este periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra, definir hacia dónde vamos e ir más allá de lo que nos oponemos.

Nuestra visión alternativa es la de un mundo organizado alrededor de la libertad, autodeterminación, cooperación y la satisfacción de las necesidades humanas —no de violencia, dominación, coacción y ganancia. La mayoría de la gente reconoce que la fuerza no da la razón. Es fácil confundir la inevitable victoria militar y la victoria política de Bush, con ganar la paz.

Político en la Ciudad de Mexico

El joven Anarquista@ Mexicano Carlos Alberto Estrada Arroyo fue recientemente sentenciado a 12 y 1/2 años de cárcel por un presunto robo que el no cometió. El 14 de Mayo, del 2001, Carlos estaba regresando del almuerzo a su trabajo de albañil en la Ciudad de Mexico, cuando fue arrestado por la policía. Después fue golpeado y torturado. Apesar de haber pasado mas de dos años en prisión el sigue desmintiendo los cargos y declarandose inocente. Carlos es un joven libertario quien estaba envuelto en actividades políticas dentro del movimiento anarquista y punk de la ciudad de Mexico, incluyendo la combativa huelga estudiantil de la UNAM en 99-2000

Carlos y su familia estan muy agradecidos por el apoyo internacional que el ha recibido incluyendo ayuda de Argentina, Brasil, USA, Francia, Italia, España y Polonia. Su madre Sara Arroyo Granados escribe: "Estoy escribiendo para agradecerles por el apoyo economico y moral que ha sido ofrecido a mi hijo. La ayuda economica que nos han dado a nosotros que somos una familia escasos recursos economicos y las cartas que ustedes han enviado a Carlos lo han animado bastante, son como las espinacas para Popeye. Cuando el se siente desanimado nosotros le llevamos las cartas y esto regresa su animo y fortaleza; Por eso yo les ruego que no dejen de escribirle, de igual manera yo personalmente me siento muy inspirada al saber que tenemos amigos, verdaderos amigos. Gracias muchachos!, gracias de todo corazón!, para todos en general de todos los estados de la república y de los países que nos han enviado su apoyo; Yo se que ustedes talves no crean en dios, pero yo espero que la vida les de de todo lo que puede ser deseado. adios."

Oportunidad.

¡a!!!

por PB Floyd

Traduzido por Rebeca Walker-Marquez

En el periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra de Estados Unidos contra Irak, algunos de quienes se oponen al imperio militar mundial estadounidense se sienten desalentados y aislados.

Esto es un grave error, en este periodo inestable hay oportunidades tremendas para avanzar en la lucha contra el capitalismo y sus imperios militares.

El periodo anterior a la guerra lanzó a las calles a millones de personas en todo el mundo en contra de la guerra. Esto no pareció importarle a Bush y la guerra pasó de todas formas. ¡Qué novedad! El punto aquí no es que la guerra sucedió a pesar de la oposición masiva. El punto es que hubo manifestaciones masivas y que millones de personas aprendieron una lección crucial: que el sistema político va a ignorar sus manifestaciones pacíficas.

La desilusión de millones de personas que no pudieron parar la guerra mediante manifestaciones pacíficas puede ir en dos direcciones: o bien la gente se orillará hacia la apatía y el silencio, o bien se radicalizarán y comenzarán a darse cuenta de que la única manera de parar la tendencia del sistema hacia el asesinato masivo, consiste en encontrar maneras para irrumpir, resistir y luchar contra el sistema. Si el sistema no escucha a la gente, la gente tendrá que derribar el sistema como acto de autodefensa.

La guerra, la falta de unidad frente a la misma por parte de las potencias capitalistas, la crisis de la ONU y la resistencia popular mundial a la guerra, han afectado el equilibrio político anterior.

Como un globo que ha sido continuamente inflado hasta explotar, todas las piezas del juego han sido momentáneamente lanzadas al aire.

Esta ruptura histórica puede abrir camino hacia un cambio social masivo. La dirección de ese cambio es desconocida y todas las partes desean aprovechar el momento y promover sus propios objetivos. Depende del movimiento contra la guerra, y particularmente de los radicales y antiautoritarios dentro del mismo, el asegurarse de que el cambio en este periodo de inestabilidad sea positivo, no negativo.

Ahora estamos en un momento crucial para organizarnos, continuar la lucha, enfatizar las lecciones aprendidas y dirigir a las personas y organizaciones que fueron movilizadas por la guerra de un movimiento reactivo frente a la guerra hacia una lucha por algo nuevo. Es crucial, en este periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra, definir hacia dónde vamos e ir más allá de lo que nos oponemos.

Nuestra visión alternativa es la de un mundo organizado alrededor de la libertad, autodeterminación, cooperación y la satisfacción de las necesidades humanas —no de violencia, dominación, coacción y ganancia. La mayoría de la gente reconoce que la fuerza no da la razón. Es fácil confundir la inevitable victoria militar y la victoria política de Bush, con ganar la paz.

El movimiento contra la guerra puede tener una mejor oportunidad de desacreditar las soluciones militares después de la guerra, que la que tuvo al prevenirla. La lucha contra la guerra ha radicalizado a segmentos de una generación entera. La gente que ha pasado por la experiencia de marchar y protestar con optimismo y de haber sido separada y atacada, se ha vuelto crítica de muchas instituciones

Continúa en pagina 14

CALENDARIO DE EVENTOS

JUNIO

6 de Junio 8pm

Película: "Batalla de Argiers, (Africa)"
Gratis 3124 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley

7 de Junio 8pm

Película: "Banned in Berkeley" "Prohibido en Berkeley". Obra de 5 mujeres con

21 de Junio 8pm

Película: "Videodrome" Gratis 3124
Shattuck Ave, Berkeley,

20-22 de Junio

Conferencia de Biodevastacion Washington, DC Contacto: larcher@foe.org

23-25 de Junio

8-10 de Agosto

Romper las Cadenas Conferencia en Contra del Complejo Industrial de Prisiones.
Universidad de Oregon, Eugene.
www.breakthechains.net

9-10 de Agosto 10am-4pm

Festival de Zines San Francisco

han enviado a carlos lo han animado bastante, son como las espinacas para popeye. Cuando el se siente desanimado nosotros le llevamos las cartas y esto regresa su animo y fortaleza; Por eso yo les ruego que no dejen de escribirle, de igual manera yo personalmente me siento muy inspirada al saber que tenemos amigos, verdaderos amigos. Gracias muchachos!, gracias de todo corazón!, para todos en general de todos los estados de la republica y de los países que nos han enviado su apoyo; Yo se que ustedes talves no crean en dios, pero yo espero que la vida les de todo lo que puede ser deseado. adios."

Para mas informes puedes contactar a upl_upl@yahoo.com
Tambien le puedes escribir directamente a el a traves del email: carloskinoi@yahoo.com
Tambien ha sido realizada una recopilacion internacional a beneficio del compañero carlos skin y si deseas obtenerlo y/o ayudar economicamente a su liberacion puedes escribir a: resist25@starmedia.com

Nosotros del Colectivo Resorte(Slingshot) estamos tratando de extender nuestra audiencia y queremos saber su opinion o pensares de esta página. Por favor escribe y mandanos ideas. 3124 Shattuck Ave. Berkeley, CA 94705 en contra de la guerra. Esto no parecio importarle a Bush y la guerra pasó de todas formas. ¡Qué novedad! El punto aquí no es que la guerra sucedió a pesar de la oposición masiva. El punto es que hubo manifestaciones masivas y que millones de personas aprendieron una lección crucial: que el sistema político va a misma por parte de las potencias capitalistas, la crisis de la ONU y la resistencia popular mundial a la guerra, han afectado el equilibrio político anterior.

Como un globo que ha sido continuamente inflado hasta explotar, todas las piezas del juego han sido momentáneamente lanzadas al guerra ha radicalizado a segmentos de una generación entera. La gente que ha pasado por la experiencia de marchar y protestar con optimismo y de haber sido separada y atacada, se ha vuelto crítica de muchas instituciones

Continúa en pagina 14

CALENDARIO DE EVENTOS

JUNIO

6 de Junio 8pm

Pelicula: "Batalla de Algiers, (Africa)"
Gratis 3124 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley

7 de Junio 8pm

Pelicula: "Banned in Berkeley" "Prohibido en Berkeley" Obra de 5 mujeres con deshabilidades sobre sus relaciones sexuales e interpersonales, mas un performance con plastica.

7-8 de Junio

Tratado Libre de el Area de las Americas(FTAA) en Miami Consulta Anti-capitalista- Louisville, Kentucky Inscripcion: ftaconsultat@yahoo.com

7-12 de Julio

Campamento de Accion Directa del Rio Salmon Proteger el bosque hermoso y salvaje de California norte Contacto: (503)957 5572 Correo electronico: bwsisq@yahoo.com, o mazamaforestdefense.org

13 de Junio 6pm

La Masa Critica de Berkeley Reclamando las calles en bicicleta Reunir al centro, Berkeley BART (todos los segundos vienes del mes)

13-15 de Junio

Conferencia de Medios de Comunicacion Aliados Bowling Green, Ohio www.alliedmediaprojects.org

14 de Junio 8pm

Pelicula: "Dersu Uzala" Gratis 3124 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley

20 de Junio 5:30 pm

La Masa Critica de Alameda Reclamando las calles en bicicleta Reunir a la casa de ayuntamiento Calles: Oak y Santa Clara

21 de Junio 8pm

Pelicula: "Videodrome" Gratis 3124 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley,

20-22 de Junio

Conferencia de Biodevastacion Washington, DC Contacto: larcher@foe.org

23-25 de Junio

Alto a la Cumbre de la OMC (Organizacion Mundial de Comercio) Sacramento, CA Contacto: (916)497-1111

27 de Junio- 7 de Julio

Earth First! Rendezvous en Minnesota Contacto: MinnehahaEF!;rrrmn@ziplip.com

27 de Junio- 26 de Julio

Verano de la Bicicleta 2003 New York City www.bikesummer.org

JULIO

10-13 de Julio

Asamblea de l@s Anarquistas Verdes Allegheney Forest, Pennsylvania www.blackandgreen.org

18-20 de Julio

Campamento de Entrenamiento para Acciones en defensa del Bosque Cascadia (Cerca de Portland), Oregon Contacto: cfa@spiritone.org (503) 241-4879

AGOSTO

1-3 de Agosto

Conferencia de Zines en Portland Recinto de Colegio de PSU, Portland, Oregon www.pdxzines.com

8 de Agosto 8pm

Fiesta para celebrar los 10 anos del Infoshop, Long Haul, 3124 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley

8-10 de Agosto

Romper las Cadenas Conferencia en Contra del Complejo Industrial de Prisiones. Universidad de Oregon, Eugene. www.breakthechains.net

9-10 de Agosto 10am-4pm

Festival de Zines San Francisco www.szfzinefest.com

10 de Agosto 1:30pm

Alto a la Guerra, Laboratorios de Livermore (925)443-7148

16 de Agosto 12-6pm

Fiesta de Zines en Los Angeles, Plummer Park centro Comunitario, 7377 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood CA www.geocities.com/lazinefiesta

SEPTIEMBRE Y ADELANTE

7-14 de Septiembre

Alto a la Cumbre de la OMC (Organizacion Mundial de Comercio), Cancun, Mexico Semana de Movilizacion Global Contacto: noalca@movimientos.org

25-26 de Octubre

Feria de Libros Anarquistas en Toronto, Canada. 519 Church St. Centro Comunitario tab2003@ziplip.com

25 de Octubre 10am-6pm

Feria de Libros, New Orleans Barrister's Gallery 1724 Oretha Castle Haley Blvd. www.nolabookfair.com

17-21 de Noviembre

Quebrantar la Cumbre del Tratado Libre de el Area de las Americas (FTAA), Miami, Florida (202)778-3320, (510)663-0888, www.ftaamiami.org

Triumph Of Kleptocracy & Death Of Reason

By Cassandra Camus

If the first casualty of war is the truth, then reason must be its first prisoner. Leave it to Americans to escalate the battlefield of the mind to an Orwellian level of shock therapy. Glued to our mind screens for the majority of our waking hours, we have become the audience at a global coliseum, cheering for enemy blood and applauding billion-dollar bombs bursting in air. Reason? Logic? Truth? Those were sold to the highest bidder long ago, to pay for the most monstrous killing machines ever created and our raging addiction to chemical energy.

War has never made a great deal of sense, and that's in large part the point. Since one tribe went out to dominate another at the point of a spear, leaders have attempted to override the logical part of the human brain by aggravating our reptilian and ruthless revenge mechanisms. In the age of industrial warfare, we have witnessed the business of killing vast numbers of opponents become a "necessary evil," and an honored form of employment. Americans will even argue that dropping atomic bombs on the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki simply "got the job done" in a more efficient manner, and therefore was acceptable "collateral damage." As I said, no reason or logic here, and don't look for truth in the wastelands of war.

Americans entered a terminal realm of doublethink and psychosis when the revolutionary band of corporate cryptocrats seized the White House, our shining center of authority. The Bushista regime has turned every commonly-held value established by previous generations on its head, in a topsy-turvy heap of nonsense and cowboy lingo. Yes, we now argue, war IS peace, slavery and paranoia is freedom, you see, and the truth will never be known because it must remain a state secret.

Our sanity slips away daily as the cluster bombs and fireballs light up our video screens, as any hope of salvaging the American Dream is trampled under the boots of ever more militarized police, under the glare of ever more sinister terror alerts, and behind the firewalls of ever more secretive and corrupted "security" agencies. It's a sophisticated destabilization of our entire society, plotted out decades ago. The way the Bush family, CIA headquarters bearing their name, always seem to leave a trail of burned-out cities, piles of dead bodies, drug scandals, and secret bank accounts behind them, and somehow never get caught-- has worn our suspicions down to a dull stupor.

Influential over our ability to reason and assess the truth are the mighty media corporations, owned by giant conglomerates who also make the weapons and the drugs which the politicians in power are so invested in. Americans are kept in a Twilight Zone limbo of steroid-stoked entertainment and shocking pseudo-reality events, barely able to keep up with the latest terror alert, let alone understand what is happening outside our country. The "fog of war" has become our sociopathic modus operandi, and the latest approval ratings let us know everything is "going great" because our lemming herd agrees the edge is where we must push.

irrationality and ignorance is a result of poor planning and excess? No-- the reality is that we're held hostage in a "fog of war" and terror by design, and the rest of the world has now become the war zone. Is it all like a spectacular video game? Yes, we've been conditioned to accept blasting away other humans like insects, from a distance. Now we must question-- who designed this game and who is promoting the even more costly future version?

Without even understanding the cause or the odds, we are prompted to blindly "support our troops," which actually means allowing the military contractors in power to bomb the hell out of another Third World country. We are prodded to display our allegiance to the flag, and declare our patriotic

Kissinger to start the CIA, financed by George Bush's granddad. Do you believe our

"Americanism" may in the future be described as a pathological syndrome, much as we now attempt to unravel the ideology and cruelty of Nazism. The two are not unconnected. A few hard truths for Americans to swallow: their teeth are. We are a relatively

Today's Slingshot Alert Level Is:

override the logical part of the human brain by aggravating our reptilian and ruthless revenge mechanisms. In the age of industrial warfare, we have witnessed the business of killing vast numbers of opponents become a "necessary evil," and an honored form of employment. Americans will even argue that dropping never be known because it must remain a state secret.

Our sanity slips away daily as the cluster bombs and fireballs light up our video screens, as any hope of salvaging the American Dream is trampled under the boots of ever more militarized police, under the glare of ever more sinister terror alerts, and behind the firewalls of ever more secretive and corrupted "security" agencies. It's a sophisticated destabilization of our entire society, plotted out decades ago. The way the Bush family, CIA headquarters bearing their name, always seem to leave a trail of burned-out cities, piles of dead bodies, drug scandals, and secret bank accounts behind them, and somehow never get caught-- has worn our suspicions down to a dull stupor.

Influential over our ability to reason and assess the truth are the mighty media corporations, owned by giant conglomerates

Without even understanding the cause or the odds, we are prompted to blindly "support our troops," which actually means allowing the military contractors in power to bomb the hell out of another Third World country. We are prodded to display our allegiance to the flag, and declare our patriotic fervor-- again, without reason or logic, simply based on conditioned slogans about freedom and democracy, while those in power are busy ripping the guts out of our Constitution and Bill of Rights.

Signs that our society has gone over the edge of sanity into the murderous realm of raging monkeys: obsession with obscure symbols, such as French fries (which we named in the first place), outrageous harassment of artists such as the Dixie Chicks and Michael Moore, who are simply stating their opinion, belying the alleged "freedom of speech" our troops are supposedly fighting for, and crowds of "pro-war" demonstrators wrapped in American flags lashing out at anyone or anything that may stand in the way of

Kissinger to start the CIA, financed by George Bush's granddad. Do you believe our

"Americanism" may in the future be described as a pathological syndrome, much as we now attempt to unravel the ideology and cruelty of Nazism. The two are not unconnected. A few hard truths for Americans to work their teeth on: We are a relatively recent colonial expansion of European empire, molded on a Roman model of expansion. We are only 5% of the world's population, 75% white, controlling over 50% of the resources of the rest of the world. There are 1.2 billion Islamic people in the world, 5 times the number of Americans. The vast majority of those people live in sub-poverty conditions, ruled over by wealthy dictators armed by the United States (as Saddam and the Taliban were).

One final little fact which festers at the root of all of this Strangelovian insanity and psychosis: if only 1% of the nuclear arsenals on our planet are deployed in a "limited" nuclear exchange, we will be living in a mutant nuclear winter and most of the species on Earth will go extinct, including ourselves quite possibly. The Bush regime has made nuclear weapons a very real first-strike option, tossing aside all treaties signed over our lifetimes. But you won't hear about that on the 6 o'clock news, unless you happen to have a TV system in your fallout shelter. By then ratings won't matter so much...

Cassandra Camus
Occupied Hawaiian Nation
Planetary Rescue Corps
<http://metamagic.org>
planetary@wildmail.com

Today's Slingshot Alert Level Is:

LIME

By TAOW

Slingshot has devised an alternative to the Department of Homeland Security's security alert system. The current system — with alerts ranging from green, to blue, to yellow, to orange, to red — is intended to frighten the public into embracing the preemptive military strikes, occupation of foreign lands, and dismantling of civil liberties necessary to enlarge the world's vastest empire. For example, right before a major non-violent anti-war protest in New York, the DHS increased the threat level, and as a result New York City police were able to win a court case permitting them to prohibit marching at protests. Now that's convenient — because of terrorism, the US government can prevent people from protesting wars that are going to cause more terrorism. It's a complete logical circle, and it's all out of our hands.

Slingshot's proposed alert system (each day's alert level will be posted on our website and indicated by a colored flag hanging from the window of our office) is intended to provide a more unbiased assessment of the threat and risk. In the Slingshot's alert system, each threat level indicates the risk to our freedom and bodily integrity arising from the police, the federal government, the US armed forces, and the environmental collapse associated with an capitalist / industrial system.

Fear has been the Bush administration's main tactic for pushing through its wars and crackdown on freedom at home. We hope to move away from fear and towards empowerment, action and resistance.

| Threat Level | Specific Risk and Actions Possible |
|--------------|---|
| Aqua | Low risk of government crackdown and US military empire. Millions in the streets raid and disarm US military bases and prevent all normal functioning of capitalist economy. Local communities smash environmentally hazardous operations. Neighborhoods organize cooperatives, autonomous structures and councils. Central police apparatus has to have a bake sale to buy gas for their single moped. |
| Green | Guarded risk of empire. US military functional but hampered as international |

By TAOW

Slingshot has devised an alternative to the Department of Homeland Security's security alert system. The current system — with alerts ranging from green, to blue, to yellow, to orange, to red — is intended to frighten the public into embracing the preemptive military strikes, occupation of foreign lands, and dismantling of civil liberties necessary to enlarge the world's vastest empire. For example, right before a major non-violent anti-war protest in New York, the DHS increased the threat level, and as a result New York City police were able to win a court case permitting them to prohibit marching at protests. Now terrorism. It's a complete logical circle, and it's all out of our hands.

Slingshot's proposed alert system (each day's alert level will be posted on our website and indicated by a colored flag hanging from the window of our office) is intended to provide a more unbiased assessment of the threat and risk. In the Slingshot's alert system, each threat level indicates the risk to our freedom and bodily integrity arising from the police, the federal government, the US armed forces, and the environmental collapse associated with an capitalist / industrial system.

Fear has been the Bush administration's main tactic for pushing through its wars and crackdown on freedom at home. We hope to move away from fear and towards empowerment, action and resistance.

| Threat Level | Specific Risk and Actions Possible |
|--------------|---|
| Aqua | Low risk of government crackdown and US military empire. Millions in the streets raid and disarm US military bases and prevent all normal functioning of capitalist economy. Local communities smash environmentally hazardous operations. Neighborhoods organize cooperatives, autonomous structures and councils. Central police apparatus has to have a bake sale to buy gas for their single moped. |
| Lemon | Guarded risk of empire. US military functional but hampered as international community revokes all base and over-flight rights. Domestic resistance disrupts arms industry, environmental threats and propaganda machine. Flourishing independent media and popular movement. |
| Lime | Elevated risk of empire. Opposition is marginalized and isolated from ordinary life of the public. Corporations control media which ignores or manipulates incidences of dissent. Profit considered more important than people. Daily life spews greenhouse gases threatening mass extinction of species. |
| Khaki | High risk of empire. Police regularly fire "less than lethal" ammunition at non-violent crowds. All activist communications and meetings monitored. Travel restrictions imposed against anyone critical of regime. All library books reported to central government data base. Military invades multiple "rogue states" around the world. |
| Vermilion | Extreme risk of empire. FBI openly resurrects COINTELPRO tactics to sow divisions within resistance movements. Opposition groups start killing each other instead of focusing on resisting the government and capitalism. Last redwood cut. |
| Violet | Empire with no apologies. United States dissolves United Nations and converts UN building in New York to luxury hotel. Operation "French, German, Russian, British, Japanese Freedom" begins. All domestic dissent is considered terrorism and suspects are shipped to a prison colony which occupies the entire Cuban island. |
| Royal | Monarchy. Bush officially changes name to "big brother." Chips implanted in all world subjects to relay location and activities to central computerized data base. |
| Navy | We are fucked. US military invades San Francisco Bay Area to prevent terrorism. Population assumes disguises and tries to bike to Canada to seek marriage of convenience with (hopefully) sympathetic ex-lovers. |

Bill of Rights.

Signs that our society has gone over the edge of sanity into the murderous realm of raging monkeys: obsession with obscure symbols, such as French fries (which we named in the first place), outrageous harassment of artists such as the Dixie Chicks and Michael Moore, who are simply stating their opinion, belying the alleged "freedom of speech" our troops are supposedly fighting for, and crowds of "pro-war" demonstrators wrapped in American flags lashing out at anyone or anything that may stand in the way of "victory."

The great danger of the lynch-mob terror-bubble we find ourselves trapped in, as the Germans under the Nazi regime were, is losing touch with the rest of the world. At the same time, we are unable to assess that this is no longer our government, but has been stolen from us by country-sized corporations and their henchmen. To the rest of the world, we seem to be reveling in our corruption, celebrating the theft of our constitutional protections, our economic resources, our dignity and reputation, and our security, by a group of second-rate elitists and dictator-wannabees. Meanwhile, innocent people are being slaughtered by high-tech weaponry designed for annihilation, along with mostly defenseless "enemy combatants," in a land far away, in a culture that most of us don't even comprehend.

Is there any hope for America's sanity? Right now, we are lost in a cowering dead-end of lies built on lies and secrecy, dating back to the end of WWII when Nazis were enlisted by controlling over 50% of the resources of the rest of the world. There are 1.2 billion Islamic people in the world, 5 times the number of Americans. The vast majority of those people live in sub-poverty conditions, ruled over by wealthy dictators armed by the United States (as Saddam and the Taliban were).

One final little fact which festers at the root of all of this Strangelovian insanity and psychosis: if only 1% of the nuclear arsenals on our planet are deployed in a "limited" nuclear exchange, we will be living in a mutant nuclear winter and most of the species on Earth will go extinct, including ourselves quite possibly. The Bush regime has made nuclear weapons a very real first-strike option, tossing aside all treaties signed over our lifetimes. But you won't hear about that on the 6 o'clock news, unless you happen to have a TV system in your fallout shelter. By then ratings won't matter so much...

Cassandra Camus
Occupied Hawaiian Nation
Planetary Rescue Corps
<http://metamagic.org>
planetary@wildmail.com

Life After Patriotism

Continued from page 1

many of us came to the urban scene from suburbs and small towns. We know that people can be stupid fucks and be damn proud of it. It's fine that we've moved on. But we must remember that beneath that brainwashing is an actual brain, being fed practically nothing but grossly manipulated media.

In many parts of the US, there's little access to the world news and analysis that the left thrives upon. American media does not encourage critical thinking. Issues are draped people start viewing the news with a critical eye, events will seem as blatantly ridiculous to them as they do to me.

This is about listening and sharing ideas with people as people, not as stereotypes. Folks won't take you seriously if you don't prove you care about what they actually think and feel. This effort is about sharing information, listening to people's response, suggesting analyses—and then stepping back and trusting people to arrive at their own in patriotism, not framed in ways that foster consideration and discussion. Debate forums that do exist, like talk radio and political debate shows, are overwhelmed by dogmatic right-biased spectacle. So-called 'alternative' free weeklies have become cookie-cutter clones spewed out by a few companies.

Serious questioning and disagreement are tantamount to treason. Bush and Co's conquering mentality – that there's one answer, it's American, and if you disagree, you are less than human – applies at home as well as abroad, and is essentially the end of debate.

The military industrial complex has powerful tools to smash dissent. The real threats of surveillance, infiltration, prison time, etc make anything beyond very mundane disagreement with the government very scary. In this climate conclusions. This is the fundamental difference between recruitment and engagement.

I don't expect people to come flocking to our movement. People have their own ways of processing information and creating change. Politicizing doesn't necessarily mean organizing—that's its own very valid project.

I'm scattering seeds, not looking for immediate recognition and political affinity. In the process, we might very well meet new friends and action partners, people who would find this activist scene on their own in a few years. Why should we wait for people to find their own radical grassroots movement? Let's put ourselves out in the world!

Let's go to people in neutral environments, where they're comfortable and their

Summer 2003 • Slingshot • Page 11

★ The Anti-War Argument--- While Still Supporting the Troops ★

in patriotism, not framed in ways that foster consideration and discussion. Debate forums that do exist, like talk radio and political debate shows, are overwhelmed by dogmatic right-biased spectacle. So-called 'alternative' free weeklies have become cookie-cutter clones spewed out by a few companies.

Serious questioning and disagreement are tantamount to treason. Bush and Co's conquering mentality – that there's one answer, it's American, and if you disagree, you are less than human – applies at home as well as abroad, and is essentially the end of debate.

The military industrial complex has powerful tools to smash dissent. The real threats of surveillance, infiltration, prison time, etc make anything beyond very mundane disagreement with the government very scary. In this climate of fear, support for the government, whether active or passive, is much easier than fully articulating and acting upon dissenting views.

But imagine a world where disagreement was okay. Where you could support people you disagreed with, where tolerance for difference was the norm. Where critical thinking and raising questions meant respect and discussion instead of being a nerd, a pinko asshole, or a domestic terrorist. This is the antithesis of the american imperialist view of the world, and it is the real meaning of freedom.

Radical activists can start spreading this freedom today, by engaging with people outside our tight, friendship-based circles—people who don't automatically share our view of the world, with whom we might disagree. This is not a critique of doing activism with groups of friends, nor is it necessarily a recruiting assignment for the suburbs. This is a call for engagement in support of critical thinking. Before I try to persuade somebody to adopt an anti-capitalist view of the world, I want them to have the critical thinking skills to actually consider what I'm saying. I want people to feel empowered to think critically about the daily news, the political double-speak, the whole nine yards, in hopes that once, conclusions. This is the fundamental difference between recruitment and engagement.

I don't expect people to come flocking to our movement. People have their own ways of processing information and creating change. Politicizing doesn't necessarily mean organizing—that's its own very valid project.

I'm scattering seeds, not looking for immediate recognition and political affinity. In the process, we might very well meet new friends and action partners, people who would find this activist scene on their own in a few years. Why should we wait for people to find their own radical grassroots movement? Let's put ourselves out in the world!

Let's go to people in neutral environments, where they're comfortable. Let's think beyond the old recipe of "talking" to people – sometimes a surprisingly challenging act. Let's go to the suburbs with flyers, posters, sticker campaigns, street theater, several times a year. Let's go in approachable small groups, looking like we're interested in people instead of attacking The Man. Let's cover cafes and Laundromats in alternative media. Let's listen to people, so we can understand people outside of divisive stereotypes. Let's try to discover the many motivations behind what comes off as unquestioning patriotism, so we can better understand why people put up with — and appear to enjoy — all this shit.

Some folks will call this an invasion or a missionary expedition. I think it's mutual aid. We don't want folks to become slaves to ideology. The message is, Stop – Don't React – Think.

Cops Arrest Clowns

Clowns were arrested, bicycles and circus

★ The Anti-War Argument--- While Still Supporting the Troops ★ by S. Wingnut

In this time of permanent war, it is our job to provide the counter perspective: That of the 24 US bombing campaigns since WWII, none resulted in the establishment or continuation of democracy. Many campaigns were waged against democratically elected leaders, and most ended with the establishment and continued funding of dictatorships. We must point out the correlation between US-sponsored "democracy" and market-based capitalism, and push for self-determination on the part of people around the world.

Many people already sense that something is deeply wrong with this country even as they hang yellow ribbons. People are hurting economically, and Bush seems to be continually missing that point. But many folks are troubled by questions of loyalty, still hurting from the September 11 attacks, and still believe the government line that US intervention is appreciated by and brings freedom and democracy to people around the world.

These days, a hot topic in patriot land – and a good way to address fuzzy patriot thinking – is support for the troops.

Support for the recent Iraq war didn't fully solidify until after the troops were in combat. After the war officially started, many folks who had serious doubts about the war felt it was unethical – unpatriotic – to protest the efforts of our soldiers, fighting for us.

You can support the troops without military actually took $720 million more from GIs in non-refundable deposits, than they paid out in college benefits between 1986 and 1993. About 90% of folks don't end up using the skills they learned in the military in their post-military jobs. What a bunch of bullshit!

Some people package these anti-military arguments under the slogan "Peace is Patriotic." The radical analysis goes further: Peace is not patriotic! Peace requires consideration, negotiation, listening. Patriotism requires unthinking allegiance. Peace won't come from following directions, only from working out new solutions that empower people, not governments.

But imagine a world where disagreement was okay. Where you could support people you disagreed with, where tolerance for difference was the norm. Where critical thinking and raising questions meant respect and discussion instead of being a nerd, a pinko asshole, or a domestic terrorist. This is the antithesis of the american imperialist view of the world, and it is the real meaning of freedom.

Radical activists can start spreading this freedom today, by engaging with people outside our tight, friendship-based circles—people who don't automatically share our view of the world, with whom we might disagree. This is not a critique of doing activism with groups of friends, nor is it necessarily a recruiting assignment for the suburbs. This is a call for engagement in support of critical thinking. Before I try to persuade somebody to adopt an anti-capitalist view of the world, I want them to have the critical thinking skills to actually consider what I'm saying. I want people to feel empowered to think critically about the daily news, the political double-speak, the whole nine yards, in hopes that once, go to the suburbs with flyers, posters, sticker campaigns, street theater, several times a year. Let's go in approachable small groups, looking like we're interested in people instead of attacking The Man. Let's cover cafes and Laundromats in alternative media. Let's listen to people, so we can understand people outside of divisive stereotypes. Let's try to discover the many motivations behind what comes off as unquestioning patriotism, so we can better understand why people put up with — and appear to enjoy — all this shit.

Some folks will call this an invasion or a missionary expedition. I think it's mutual aid. We don't want folks to become slaves to ideology. The message is, Stop – Don't React – Think.

Cops Arrest Clowns

Clowns were arrested, bicycles and circus gear impounded, and a community house raided in St. Louis during the Biodevastation 7 counter-conference to the Monsanto-sponsored World Agricultural Forum promoting genetically modified organisms (GMOs). Nine Flying Rutabaga Circus members, riding to the conference to announce their Caravan Across the Cornbelt anti-GMO bike tour to Washington, DC, were all arrested. Fifteen others were grabbed in a simultaneous raid on the house hosting the bike circus. On the news, police laid out a table full of "weapons-in-progress" obtained in the raid, such as roofing nails, newspaper juggling pins, a whip, circus gear for fire twirling, and a poorly assembled napkin tucked into a bottle. Homeland Security has their priorities straight, alright. Contact St. Louis Police Chief Joe Mokwa at 314-444-5624 and tell him to give the clowns back their bikes!

provide the counter perspective. That of the 24 US bombing campaigns since WWII, none resulted in the establishment or continuation of democracy. Many campaigns were waged against democratically elected leaders, and most ended with the establishment and continued funding of dictatorships. We must point out the correlation between US-sponsored "democracy" and market-based capitalism, and push for self-determination on the part of people around the world.

Many people already sense that something is deeply wrong with this country even as they hang yellow ribbons. People are hurting economically, and Bush seems to be continually missing that point. But many folks are troubled by questions of loyalty, still hurting from the September 11 attacks, and still believe the government line that US intervention is appreciated by and brings freedom and democracy to people around the world.

These days, a hot topic in patriot land – and a good way to address fuzzy patriot thinking – is support for the troops.

Support for the recent Iraq war didn't fully solidify until after the troops were in combat. After the war officially started, many folks who had serious doubts about the war felt it was unethical – unpatriotic – to protest the efforts of our soldiers, fighting for us.

You can support the troops, without supporting the designs of the Commander in Chief, because you don't support people fighting and dying, period. In particular, we can support troops who break ranks. Support for troops does not mean demanding they occupy a country where they're clearly not wanted—witness skyrocketing anti-occupation protests in Iraq. Instead, real support means good-paying jobs at home, non-militarized education, and emotional support of friends and family.

There is a poverty draft in place today. Despite small upsurges in interest in the military after 9/11 and the Iraq war, most folks still join the military to receive promised job skills and education funding. But two-thirds of recruits never get the financial aid they were promised – and only 15% actually get the four year degree they wanted! According to a report in the Army Times, the 1993. About 90% of folks don't end up using the skills they learned in the military in their post-military jobs. What a bunch of bullshit!

Some people package these anti-military arguments under the slogan "Peace is Patriotic." The radical analysis goes further: Peace is not patriotic! Peace requires consideration, negotiation, listening. Patriotism requires unthinking allegiance. Peace won't come from following directions, only from working out new solutions that empower people, not governments.

Now is the time to sever the link between support for government and support for people. Wars waged by the US to "liberate" people elsewhere, supported by people here at home, are not fought in the interests of people at home or abroad. Government leaders, and their friends in corporate boardrooms – from Bush and Cheney to Saddam – fight wars for their own private power-mongering interests, not in the interests of regular folks in either the US or Iraq. The money river that starts at government founts and pools around defense contractors runs dry by the time it reaches the dude on the street.

Let's bust up myths that assume the government cares about us, and replace government loyalty with people loyalty. George Bush isn't my man, my best idiot, my friend – YOU ARE.

Is North Korea Next?

Article by KT Joy Sojourner
Preface by Slingshot staff

Before the war on Iraq, the U.S. government had marked Stalinist North Korea as part of the "Axis of Evil," and since the war, attention has turned toward North Korea as a possible second front for U.S. military aggression. Although both North and South Korea have been trying to negotiate Korean unification, the current U.S. administration has purposefully provoked and maligned North Korea with the intent of thwarting reunification so the U.S. won't have to face an East Asian arms race between a nuclearized Korea, China and potentially, Japan. North Korea, in return, wishes to "normalize relations" with the U.S. and thus participate fully in global capitalist exploitation.

This article covers some background information on the recent history and current situation with U.S./North Korea relations.

As U.S. military confrontation in Iraq de-escalates, the war-mongering Bush Administration now has the time and resources to attack other regions. North Korea, along with Iran and prewar Iraq, was named by Bush as part of an "axis of evil" and may be next on the list. Bush has said that he "loathes Kim Jong Il", the North Korean President. Bush asserts that North Korea does not do enough to fight terrorism and continues to sell ballistic missile technology to countries designated by the U.S. as states sponsoring terrorism. North Korea, reacting to these verbal attacks along with Bush's doctrine of preemptive strikes, has been threatened with a possible war with the U.S.. North Korea has restarted its nuclear weapons manufacturing projects and is using them as a bargaining tool while trying to negotiate a peace treaty.

On April 23 the U.S., China and North

Washington where they were used to map targets during the war. The North Korean state news agency said, "The inspection and disarmament forced by the U.S. upon an independent state in violation of its sovereignty and its right to existence without any proper reason and ground are only aimed to justify and legalize aggression and war."

The U.S. currently has 37,000 troops based ships would block North Korean exports. North Korea asserts it will halt all nuclear programs if Washington recognizes their sovereignty and provides credible assurances of non-aggression. They are not asking for money, however they have offered to entirely scrap its ballistic missiles program in exchange for oil, energy, and economic exchange and normal relations. Bush says, militarized country that makes a large portion of its small economy on weapons sales. Bush has been quoted as saying, "It's not what they've got, but where it goes." U.S. Admiral Charles R. Larson, former commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific, argued that a strong military presence in Asia was necessary to ensure security and guarantee America a dominant role in trade.

The history of stressed U.S.-Korean relations began after the Second World War when the U.S. arrived on the peninsula to accept the surrender of Japanese troops. The commander of U.S. forces informed his officers that Korea was "an enemy of the United States" and should be treated as such because they opposed U.S. dominance. The U.S. is primarily responsible for the division of Korea, has oppressed popular movements for a unified democratic Korea, encouraged Japanese hegemony, instituted unpopular military leaders friendly to U.S. interests...the U.S. itself introduced the nuclear threat to the peninsula when it threatened to use nuclear weapons during the Korean War. Every time the U.S. and North Korea meet, the talks quickly degenerate into discussions of North Korea's nuclear program.

North Korea had a working nuclear research reactor in 1987, but had signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty in 1985. By 1993 all nuclear weapons facilities, including a weapons-grade plutonium reprocessing plant, were shut down in North Korea. For years Pyongyang has used the status of its nuclear program to draw the U.S. into negotiations over normalization of relations. North Korea has been consistently seeking to negotiate a peace treaty to end the standoff that began with the Korean War. It is the U.S. which the current U.S. administration has purposefully provoked and maligned North Korea with the intent of thwarting reunification so the U.S. won't have to face an East Asian arms race between a nuclearized Korea, China and potentially, Japan. North Korea, in return, wishes to "normalize relations" with the U.S. and thus participate fully in global capitalist exploitation.

This article covers some background information on the recent history and current situation with U.S./North Korea relations.

As U.S. military confrontation in Iraq de-escalates, the war-mongering Bush Administration now has the time and resources to attack other regions. North Korea, along with Iran and prewar Iraq, was named by Bush as part of an "axis of evil" and may be next on the list. Bush has said that he "loathes Kim Jong Il", the North Korean President. Bush asserts that North Korea does not do enough to fight terrorism and continues to sell ballistic missile technology to countries designated by the U.S. as states sponsoring terrorism. North Korea, reacting to these verbal attacks along with Bush's doctrine of preemptive strikes, has been threatened with a possible war with the U.S.. North Korea has restarted its nuclear weapons manufacturing projects and is using them as a bargaining tool while trying to negotiate a peace treaty.

On April 23, the U.S., China, and North Korea met in Beijing to discuss North Korea's nuclear weapons, U.S. economic sanctions on North Korea, and possible resolutions to the stressed North Korean/U.S. relations. North Korea is requesting normalized economic exchanges and diplomatic relations with Washington as well as a promise they will not be attacked. The U.S. refuses to negotiate until North Korea dismantles its nuclear facilities and allows verification of their weapons manufacturing.

Pyongyang (the North Korean capital) is understandably wary of this demand considering the U.S. hostile policy towards North Korea and believes verification--the hunt for weapons of mass destruction--in Iraq was a pretext to start the war. Indeed, U.N. reports on their findings of weapons manufacturing in Iraq went straight back to any proper reason and ground are only aimed to justify and legalize aggression and war."

The U.S. currently has 37,000 troops based exchange for oil, energy, and economic exchange and normal relations. Bush says, along the border between North and South Korea. The Pentagon has drafted and recently modified plans for strikes to take out North Korea's key nuclear production sites which are located in the Yongbyon region. An attack on Pyongyang's nuclear facilities could spread lethal radiation over China, Japan, South Korea, and Russia. In December, the U.S. began circulating proposals for a policy of "tailed containment" under which U.S. naval

"they're back to the old blackmail game".

It serves U.S. interests to have a hostile North Korean regime, to justify military spending and military activities in the region. The U.S. Department of Defense stated in 1993 that the U.S. needed an army capable of fighting two regional conflicts against mid-sized third world countries with large modern armies. The greatest danger cited was simultaneous military actions by Iraq and North Korea. North Korea is a highly dominant role in trade.

The history of stressed U.S.-Korean relations began after the Second World War when the U.S. arrived on the peninsula to accept the surrender of Japanese troops. The commander of U.S. forces informed his officers that Korea was "an enemy of the United States" and should be treated as such because they opposed U.S. dominance. The U.S. is primarily responsible for the division of Korea, has oppressed popular movements for a unified democratic Korea, encouraged Japanese hegemony, instituted unpopular military leaders friendly to U.S. interests...the U.S. itself introduced the nuclear threat to the peninsula when it threatened to use nuclear weapons during the Korean War. Every time the U.S. and North Korea meet, the talks quickly degenerate into discussions of North Korea's nuclear program.

North Korea had a working nuclear research reactor in 1987, but had signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty in 1985. By 1993 all nuclear weapons facilities, including a weapons-grade plutonium reprocessing plant, were shut down in North Korea. For years Pyongyang has used the status of its nuclear program to draw the U.S. into negotiations over normalization of relations. North Korea has been consistently seeking to negotiate a peace treaty to end the standoff that began with the Korean War. It is the U.S. which refuses to end the hostile relations.

THE SOUTH KOREAN PERSPECTIVE

The U.S. is standing in the way of reunification movements in Korea. Former South Korean President Kim Dae Jung instituted a "sunshine policy" towards North Korea to encourage cooperation between the countries. Present South Korean President Roh Moo-Hyun, a former human rights lawyer, is continuing this policy, which Washington is unhappy about. Anti-U.S. sentiment in South Korea is strong after U.S. support for military dictators and presence in the region. In June 2002, two U.S. soldiers accidentally killed two South Korean schoolgirls when they ran them over with their vehicle. Tens of thousands showed up in Seoul to protest against the acquittal of the soldiers in U.S. military court and demand an end to U.S. military presence on the peninsula.

stressed North Korean/U.S. relations: North Korea is requesting normalized economic exchanges and diplomatic relations with Washington as well as a promise they will not be attacked. The U.S. refuses to negotiate until North Korea dismantles its nuclear facilities and allows verification of their weapons manufacturing.

Pyongyang (the North Korean capital) is understandably wary of this demand considering the U.S. hostile policy towards North Korea and believes verification--the hunt for weapons of mass destruction--in Iraq was a pretext to start the war. Indeed, U.N. reports on their findings of weapons manufacturing in Iraq went straight back to

along the border between North and South Korea. The Pentagon has drafted and recently modified plans for strikes to take out North Korea's key nuclear production sites which are located in the Yongbyon region. An attack on Pyongyang's nuclear facilities could spread lethal radiation over China, Japan, South Korea, and Russia. In December, the U.S. began circulating proposals for a policy of "tailed containment" under which U.S. naval

"they're back to the old blackmail game".

It serves U.S. interests to have a hostile North Korean regime, to justify military spending and military activities in the region. The U.S. Department of Defense stated in 1993 that the U.S. needed an army capable of fighting two regional conflicts against mid-sized third world countries with large modern armies. The greatest danger cited was simultaneous military actions by Iraq and North Korea. North Korea is a highly reunification movements in Korea. Former South Korean President Kim Dae Jung instituted a "sunshine policy" towards North Korea to encourage cooperation between the countries. Present South Korean President Roh Moo-Hyun, a former human rights lawyer, is continuing this policy, which Washington is unhappy about. Anti-U.S. sentiment in South Korea is strong after U.S. support for military dictators and presence in the region. In June 2002, two U.S. soldiers accidentally killed two South Korean schoolgirls when they ran them over with their vehicle. Tens of thousands showed up in Seoul to protest against the acquittal of the soldiers in U.S. military court and demand an end to U.S. military presence on the peninsula.

The Argentina Autonomista Project (AAP) and the Inter-American Center for the Arts, Sustainability, and Action (CASA) will again work with a vast array of social organizations in Buenos Aires, Argentina, such as the Coordinadora Anibal Veron, unemployed workers, the popular neighborhood assemblies, community artists, and radical University of Buenos Aires faculty and students who are struggling to create space for the masses of poor and unemployed left by the recession, continuous austerity and structural adjustment programs, privatizations, and inept governments.

Over the last year an incredible wave of social protest and action has engulfed Argentina. In the midst of a severe economic crisis there have been massive street protests, over eighty factory take-overs, more than three hundred coordinated microenterprise cooperatives organized by unemployed women and men, countless neighborhood associations formed, and many other autonomous popular initiatives. Yet, little is heard about this in the United States or in Europe.

The purpose of the Argentina autonomista project is to bring news about events in Argentina to North America through people-to-people exchanges and the internet (web and email) and to facilitate non-hierarchical communication within Argentina, especially among groups with a minimum of resources.

In the past, the AAP coordinator, Graciela Monteagudo, has helped organize a number of street theater actions with local groups in Argentina and in the U.S. covering both global and local social justice issues. Recently, the AAP coordinated a delegation of two community artists and organizers to Buenos Aires, Argentina, where they collaborated with the Coordinadora Anibal Veron, unemployed workers, neighborhood assemblies, community artists, FEAS, autonomous feminists, and radical university faculty and students. Over the course of three weeks the artists lived with these communities and participated in the organization of an interactive artistic and cultural gathering of 5,000 people in demand for human rights in Argentina.

Working alongside with these communities as a member of this delegation, volunteers can have the opportunity to provide a meaningful service to the microenterprise coops by working in their bakeries, organic gardens and cheap art stores. Also, opportunities are available to participate in direct democracy processes of decision and action while practicing the Spanish language and being a delegate for social change. These opportunities are self-funded, so participating individuals will be responsible for their own food, transport and lodging.

For information or contributions contact:

Graciela Monteagudo
188 Barre St.
Montpelier, VT 05602

Graciela can be reached via her cell phone in Buenos Aires at 011-54-9-11-4156-5847 or when she's in the US, via her home phone at (802) 223-8445 or her cell phone at (802) 272-5606.

2003 SUMMER ACTION TOUR

Summer 2003 • Slingshot • Page 13

Cascadia Summer • Oregon, N. California, and S. Washington

June - August

Come to Cascadia to protect endangered forests. In the last year, eco-activists have seen a rapid increase in the level of forest destruction on public lands, the erosion of hard-fought legal protections (as inadequate as they were, they were better than nothing), and a rise in the amount of government repression on groups fighting for social and environmental justice. The Cascadia Summer campaign is made up of a diverse group of local conservationists fighting to protect forests, streams, and wildlife. We recognize and value strength in diversity of tactics. During Cascadia Summer, activists will be engaging in a wide range of tactics from civil disobedience, tree-sits, public outreach in urban and rural areas, lawsuits, political pressure, and popular education. Trainings in direct action, non-violence, blockading, legal issues, and much more will be provided. Come out and join us this summer for a few days, a week, or three months to protect Native Forests, Old Growth trees, Salmon, Owls, and Rivers. Contact Cascadia Summer, 1540 SE Clinton St, Portland, OR 97202 www.cascadiasummer.org

FTAA Miami, Anti-Capitalist Consulta • Louisville, KY

June 7-8, 2003

Attend the anti-capitalist consulta to organize resistance to the Free Trade Area of the Americas treaty. This planning meeting will begin preparations for actions against the FTAA ministerial meeting being held in Miami, Florida from November 20-22. Help build a broad based, diverse anti-capitalist response to the ministerial. Within the framework of

Massasauga Earth First! Action Camp • Michigan

June 13-15

A weekend of skill sharing, workshops, and strategy session. Contact POB 44173, Detroit, MI 48212 313-410-4155; massasaugaef@yahoo.com

Allied Media Conference • Bowling Green, Ohio

June 13-15

Conference for creators and supporters of independent press, radio, music, TV, web, movies, etc. Contact AMC, PO Box 1225, Bowling Green, Ohio 43402 (419) 494-6850; www.alliedmediaprojects.org

Eastern Forest Defense Camp • Southeast Ohio

June 16-23

Training camp with direct action workshops. www.athenscommons.org/actioncamp

Disrupt the EU Summit • Thessaloniki, Greece

June 20-21

The European Union leaders will meet in order to impose new anti-popular measures, to follow up previous reactionary decisions. People from all over will be on hand to disrupt the summit.

Biodevastation Conference • Washington, DC

June 20-22

Gathering to protest to the annual convention of the Biotechnology Industry Organization. Contact larcher@foe.org

Stop the World Trade Organization public education forums etc. Contact 916-497-1111 www.sacmobilization.org

BikeSummer 2003 • New York City

June 27 - July 26

BikeSummer — an annual tradition — is a month-long festival celebrating the bicycle with educational rides, street theater, classes, art workshops, eco tours, advocacy discussions, music, films, and more. New York City not only boasts one of the best mass transportation systems in the world, but also one of the greatest urban cycling experiences. P.O. Box 249, NY, NY 10002, 212-330-7083 www.bikesummer.org

North American Rainbow Gathering

July 1 - 7

This year to be in the Great Basin states (Utah, Nevada, California). No definite

location as of press time — go ask a hippie on the street for directions. www.welcomehome.org

Green Anarchist gathering • Pennsylvania

July 10-13

Gathering with discussion and wilderness skills training. Contact Black & Green, POB 835, Greensburg, PA 15601; www.blackandgreen.org

Shut down the WTO Ministerial • Cancun, Mexico

September 10 -15

Join thousands of people in shutting down the WTO's Fifth Ministerial Summit in Cancun. They is also a call for an International Day of Action with local actions to disrupt commerce around the globe

Disrupt the FTAA Miami Ministerial Summit • Miami Florida

November 17 - 21

Join thousands of people around the world and from throughout North and South America in shutting down the Free Trade Area of the Americas ministerial meeting in downtown Miami. There may be a Day of Action on November 19 and teach-ins, seminars, reality tours, concerts, forums, rallies and marches all week long. 202 778-3320, 510 663-0888, www.ftaamiami.org and a rise in the amount of government repression on groups fighting for social and environmental justice. The Cascadia Summer campaign is made up of a diverse group of local conservationists fighting to protect forests, streams, and wildlife. We recognize and value strength in diversity of tactics. During Cascadia Summer, activists will be engaging in a wide range of tactics from civil disobedience, tree-sits, public outreach in urban and rural areas, lawsuits, political pressure, and popular education. Trainings in direct action, non-violence, blockading, legal issues, and much more will be provided. Come out and join us this summer for a few days, a week, or three months to protect Native Forests, Old Growth trees, Salmon, Owls, and Rivers. Contact Cascadia Summer, 1540 SE Clinton St, Portland, OR 97202 www.cascadiasummer.org

FTAA Miami, Anti-Capitalist Consulta • Louisville, KY

June 7-8, 2003

Attend the anti-capitalist consulta to organize resistance to the Free Trade Area of the Americas treaty. This planning meeting will begin preparations for actions against the FTAA ministerial meeting being held in Miami, Florida from November 20-22. Help build a broad based, diverse anti-capitalist response to the ministerial. Within the framework of creative militant action we hope to create new models of resistance that strengthen and revitalize our anti-capitalist/anti-authoritarian community. Affinity groups, student groups, community organizations, radical labor organizations, collectives and all others opposed to capitalism and the FTAA are invited. Please pre-register: ftaaconsulta@yahoo.com

Green, Ohio

June 13-15

Conference for creators and supporters of independent press, radio, music, TV, web, movies, etc. Contact AMC, PO Box 1225, Bowling Green, Ohio 43402 (419) 494-6850; www.alliedmediaprojects.org.

Eastern Forest Defense Camp • Southeast Ohio

June 16-23

Training camp with direct action workshops. www.athenscommons.org/actioncamp

Disrupt the EU Summit • Thessaloniki, Greece

June 20-21

The European Union leaders will meet in order to impose new anti-popular measures, to follow up previous reactionary decisions. People from all over will be on hand to disrupt the summit.

Biodevastation Conference • Washington, DC

June 20-22

Gathering to protest to the annual convention of the Biotechnology Industry Organization. Contact larcher@foe.org

Stop the World Trade Organization Summit of Ministers of Trade, Agriculture, and Environment • Sacramento, Calif.

June 23-25, 2003

Stop the WTO and the United States' effort to force genetically engineered food and corporate factory farming on the rest of the world. Mass actions ranging from militant direct action to legal protests, street theatre, discussions, music, films, and more. New York City not only boasts one of the best mass transportation systems in the world, but also one of the greatest urban cycling experiences. P.O. Box 249, NY, NY 10002, 212-330-7083 www.bikesummer.org

North American Rainbow Gathering

July 1 - 7

This year to be in the Great Basin states (Utah, Nevada, California). No definite

location as of press time — go ask a hippie on the street for directions. www.welcomehome.org

Green Anarchist gathering • Pennsylvania

July 10-13

Gathering with discussion and wilderness skills training. Contact Black & Green, POB 835, Greensburg, PA 15601; www.blackandgreen.org

Shut down the WTO Ministerial • Cancun, Mexico

September 10 -15

Join thousands of people in shutting down the WTO's Fifth Ministerial Summit in Cancun. They is also a call for an International Day of Action with local actions to disrupt commerce around the globe.

2nd Toronto Anarchist Bookfair 2003

October 25-26

Check out the bookfair, with workshops the next day. 519 Church Street Community Centre, in downtown Toronto. Requests for tables at the bookfair and proposals for workshops should be sent in writing to tab2003@ziplip.com by August 1.

Disrupt the FTAA Miami Ministerial Summit • Miami Florida

November 17 - 21

Join thousands of people around the world and from throughout North and South America in shutting down the Free Trade Area of the Americas ministerial meeting in downtown Miami. There may be a Day of Action on November 19 and teach-ins, seminars, reality tours, concerts, forums, rallies and marches all week long. 202 778-3320, 510 663-0888, www.ftaamiami.org.

The Break the Chains conference will be held Aug.8-10 at Univ. of Oregon in Eugene. It is dedicated to fighting repression, supporting prisoners, and eliminating prisons altogether. By providing anti-prison education, building on existing prisoner support efforts, learning from veteran prison activists, and initiating new campaigns against the prison industrial complex, this conference is intended to initiate a new era of heightened prisoner support and anti-prison activism.

Perhaps no other single issue so convincingly illustrates the struggle for total liberation, as does the prison industrial complex. Resisting prisons is resisting state repression and blatant social control; it is resisting the most terrifying examples of racism, sexism, and homophobia, the criminalization of the poor and capitalist exploitation of labor. For this reason, the Break the Chains conference hopes to exemplify the need for continued and heightened prisoner support with our ultimate goal being prison abolition. Prison abolition is a

SEED BALLS IN FIVE EASY STEPS

Seed Balls for sowing life in abandoned places

revitalize our anti-capitalist/anti-authoritarian community. Affinity groups, student groups, community organizations, radical labor organizations, collectives and all others opposed to capitalism and the FTAA are invited. Please pre-register: ftaaconsulta@yahoo.com

Sacramento, Calif.

June 23-25, 2003

Stop the WTO and the United States' effort to force genetically engineered food and corporate factory farming on the rest of the world. Mass actions ranging from militant direct action to legal protests, street theatre,

October 25-26

Check out the bookfair, with workshops the next day. 519 Church Street Community Centre, in downtown Toronto. Requests for tables at the bookfair and proposals for workshops should be sent in writing to tab2003@ziplip.com by August 1.

Aug. 8-10 at Univ. of Oregon in Eugene.

It is dedicated to fighting repression, supporting prisoners, and eliminating prisons altogether. By providing anti-prison education, building on existing prisoner support efforts, learning from veteran prison activists, and initiating new campaigns against the prison industrial complex, this conference is intended to initiate a new era of heightened prisoner support and anti-prison activism.

Perhaps no other single issue so convincingly illustrates the struggle for total liberation, as does the prison industrial complex. Resisting prisons is resisting state repression and blatant social control; it is resisting the most terrifying examples of racism, sexism, and homophobia, the criminalization of the poor and capitalist exploitation of labor. For this reason, the Break the Chains conference hopes to exemplify the need for continued and heightened prisoner support with our ultimate goal being prison abolition. Prison abolition is a political vision that seeks to eliminate the need for prisons and acknowledges the devastating effect that prisons have on poor and marginalized communities.

Wide ranges of folks have agreed to attend and share their knowledge, including former prisoners. Organizations attending include Free Mumia Coalition, Prison Legal News, and Out of Control Lesbian Committee to Support Women in Prison. There will be people working with prisoners that are HIV/AIDS infected and Black Panther and American Indian Movement elders, as well as a participant in the Attica rebellion of the 70's.

Any movement that does not support its political internees is a movement destined to fail. When power is challenged, it inevitably turns to violent repression and imprisonment to maintain itself. In order to avoid defeat, movements must become organized and capable of combating the repression of the state apparatus, and they must be able to support their comrades and allies in the event that they are arrested or imprisoned. Few would commit themselves to a movement that would leave them behind prison walls, or a movement that is incapable of sustaining itself in the face of state intimidation. Contact info at P.O. Box 11331, Eugene Oregon 97440 or www.breakthechain.net

SEED BALLS IN FIVE EASY STEPS

Seed Balls for sowing life in abandoned places

1 part dry seed mix: 100 different kinds of seeds... choose carefully if you are sowing them anywhere even slightly wild; you don't want to introduce anything that will upset the natural ecosystem. However, I say if you're in a big city, anything goes! Mix up all of the most tenacious edibles you can find and pray for cracks in the concrete as the burdock comes busting through!!
3 parts dry, living compost: Use biodynamic compost if possible. NOT store bought or anything that has been sterilized. The soil fauna must be present.

Mix together the seeds and the compost until its all blended up, then add...

5 parts powdered RED clay: this can be dug when the streams are low, or bought from a local potter.. it must be red clay, which is rich in all the essential nutrients. The more local the source, the better. Mix everything together with your hands until its all a fine powder... the smell will intoxicate you with visions of abundance...

Add 2 parts water, a little at a time until the whole mixture is the consistency of cookie dough. Mix it with your fingers and knead into a ball. Now you're ready to start rolling the balls...1/2 inch in diameter is the recommended size; each ball will contain 10-50 seeds.

Toss them on a tarp and let dry at least 24 hours

Moment of Opportunity

Momento de Oportunidad

En Español

Continuado de pagina 9

sociales. En particular, han sido desacreditados los medios de comunicación, que normalmente sirven para promover la estabilidad política, social y la hegemonía.

Para millones de personas en Estados Unidos el gobierno estadounidense ya no es "su" gobierno, sino una fuerza hostil y represiva que las pone en peligro. Para la mayor parte de la gente en el mundo, se ha vuelto claro que la mayor amenaza a la paz y la libertad, es el gobierno estadounidense y su actuación como poder único, que no es cuestionado, que no rinde cuentas a nadie y que está nuclearmente armado.

Somos Ciudadanos de la Tierra

¿Qué acciones puede tomar la gente para usar este periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra contra la intención de Bush de forjar un imperio americano?

Ha sido de gran inspiración ver la creatividad y el valor de la gente de Irak al resistir la ocupación de las fuerzas estadounidenses. Bush justificó la invasión como un esfuerzo para llevar "libertad" y liberación a Irak. Pero en los primeros cinco días después de que las tropas estadounidenses aplastaron la resistencia militar, miles de iraquíes comenzaron a marchar pacíficamente en las calles, con pancartas escritas en inglés exigiendo "Yanquis, go home".

El movimiento iraquí contra la ocupación no humanos en regímenes que instala en países que ha "liberado". Son comunes las condiciones represivas en los países apoyados por Estados Unidos. Muchos de los países que sirvieron de base militar para la guerra contra Irak, tienen un nefasto historial de dictaduras, tortura y represión. Así, la movilización contra el apoyo estadounidense a las violaciones de los derechos humanos, puede dar al movimiento de oposición en Estados Unidos, oportunidades para criticar el apremio hacia un imperio estadounidense mayor.

Antes de la guerra un eslogan popular fue "no blood for oil" ("no sangre por petróleo"). Ha sido sorprendente la rapidez y obviedad con que la ocupación estadounidense ha puesto en claro que el principal objetivo de la guerra fue el control del petróleo. Al momento en que publicamos este artículo, la ONU está lista para conceder a la ocupación estadounidense el control directo del dinero generado por las ventas de petróleo iraquí. El dinero será, supuestamente, usado para ayuda humanitaria y para la reconstrucción de Irak.

La realidad es que la reconstrucción será llevada a cabo por corporaciones gigantes estadounidenses con vínculos cercanos a la administración de Bush. A Bechtel se le concedió sin licitación, un contrato de 680 millones de dólares para reconstruir Irak, sólo unos cuantos días después de que terminó la lucha. La compañía Halliburton, que perteneció en el pasado al vicepresidente Cheney, recibió discretamente un contrato para la have a better chance of discrediting military solutions after the war than it did preventing the war.

In English

Continued from page 1

The anti-war struggle has radicalized portions of an entire generation. People who have been through the experience of optimistically marching and rallying — only to be dismissed and attacked — have become critical towards many social institutions. In particular the media, which normally serves to promote political and social stability and hegemony, has been discredited.

For millions of people in the US, the United States government is no longer "their" government — it is a hostile, repressive force that endangers them. For most people around the world, it has become clear that the greatest threat to peace and freedom is the US government operating as an unchallenged, unaccountable, nuclear-armed mono-power.

We are Citizens of the Earth

What tangible actions can people take to use the aftermath of the war against Bush's drive to forge an American empire?

It has been inspiring to see the creativity and courage of the Iraq people's resistance to Iraq's occupation by US forces. Bush touted the invasion as an effort to bring "freedom" and liberation to Iraq. But within just a few days after US troops crushed military resistance, thousands of Iraqis began surprisingly, this involves merely recycling the old regime. Police and other officials under the former "evil" Baathist regime have now been rehired to be police and officials for the new "free" regime.

The difference is that now the leaders are American generals and Iraqi puppets of the Americans. Ordinary Iraqis are nervous to see their former oppressors re-armed, but Bush's version of "freedom" doesn't have much to do with the lives of ordinary people. As usual, the American rulers' idea of "freedom" is freedom for American corporations to do business in Iraq. None of this is a surprise — western imperialism has always used local elites to control the local population.

Saddam's regime was brutal, using summary execution, torture and a whole host of police state tactics. Unfortunately, the US commonly tolerates or promotes human rights violations in regimes it installs in countries it has "liberated." Repressive conditions are common in countries supported by the US. Many of the countries that provided bases for the war against Iraq have horrible records of dictatorship, torture and repression. Agitating against US support for human rights violations can provide the American opposition opportunities to criticize the rush towards a larger US empire.

Before the war, a popular slogan was "no blood for oil." It has been astonishing how quickly and boldly the American occupiers have made clear that dominance over oil was a pegrados que las pone en peligro — para la mayor parte de la gente en el mundo, se ha vuelto claro que la mayor amenaza a la paz y la libertad, es el gobierno estadounidense y su actuación como poder único, que no es cuestionado, que no rinde cuentas a nadie y que está nuclearmente armado.

Somos Ciudadanos de la Tierra

¿Qué acciones puede tomar la gente para usar este periodo inmediato posterior a la guerra contra la intención de Bush de forjar un imperio americano?

Ha sido de gran inspiración ver la creatividad y el valor de la gente de Irak al resistir la ocupación de las fuerzas estadounidenses. Bush justificó la invasión como un esfuerzo para llevar "libertad" y liberación a Irak. Pero en los primeros cinco días después de que las tropas estadounidenses aplastaron la resistencia militar, miles de iraquíes comenzaron a marchar pacíficamente en las calles, con pancartas escritas en inglés exigiendo "Yanquis, go home".

El movimiento iraquí contra la ocupación no ha sido, en general, un movimiento pro-Saddam. Los participantes están contentos de no tener dictadura, pero no quieren reemplazada con un estado clientelista pro-estadounidense. Aquí en Estados Unidos los activistas en contra de la guerra debemos hacer lo posible para apoyar la resistencia a la ocupación en Irak. Los soldados estadounidenses han disparado en manifestaciones pacíficas y asesinado a docenas de civiles. El movimiento anti-imperialista estadounidense debe asegurarse de que la sangre derramada en Irak, es la de nuestras hermanas y hermanos, por la cual el regimen militar estadounidense deberá rendir cuentas.

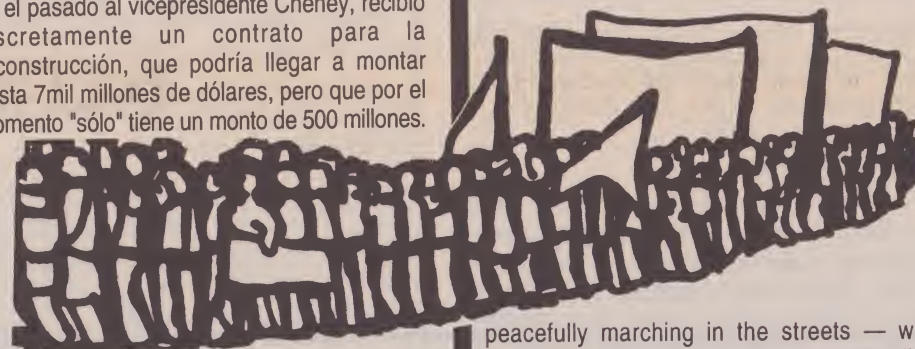

Podemos solidarizarnos con el pueblo iraquí —mientras avanzamos en nuestras metas domésticas— ayudando a mantener las noticias sobre la resistencia iraquí en los encabezados de los medios. Los medios de comunicación estadounidenses, después de una cobertura inicial sobre las manifestaciones anti-estadounidenses en Irak, prácticamente han callado sobre el tema. ¿Esto significa que han parado las protestas en Irak? Es muy poco probable. Tal vez sea hora de enviar medios de comunicación independientes y observadores civiles a Irak.

Mientras este artículo está siendo escrito, la ocupación estadounidense está organizando un régimen "nuevo" para controlar Irak. No es una oposición en Estados Unidos, oportunidades para criticar el apremio hacia un imperio estadounidense mayor.

Antes de la guerra un eslogan popular fue "no blood for oil" ("no sangre por petróleo"). Ha sido sorprendente la rapidez y obviedad con que la ocupación estadounidense ha puesto en claro que el principal objetivo de la guerra fue el control del petróleo. Al momento en que publicamos este artículo, la ONU está lista para conceder a la ocupación estadounidense el control directo del dinero generado por las ventas de petróleo iraquí. El dinero será, supuestamente, usado para ayuda humanitaria y para la reconstrucción de Irak.

La realidad es que la reconstrucción será llevada a cabo por corporaciones gigantes estadounidenses con vínculos cercanos a la administración de Bush. A Bechtel se le concedió sin licitación, un contrato de 680 millones de dólares para reconstruir Irak, sólo unos cuantos días después de que terminó la lucha. La compañía Halliburton, que perteneció en el pasado al vicepresidente Cheney, recibió discretamente un contrato para la reconstrucción, que podría llegar a montar hasta 7mil millones de dólares, pero que por el momento "sólo" tiene un monto de 500 millones.

La prisa para comenzar la guerra, tiene más sentido cuando nos damos cuenta de que los asesores cercanos a Bush y sus aliados, esperan recibir millones de dólares por el petróleo iraquí después de la guerra. Es crucial que el movimiento radical estadounidense difunda estas conexiones después de la guerra.

Las contradicciones, mentiras y violencia que mencionamos anteriormente, son sólo unos cuantos de los resultados de la guerra contra Irak. Ahora es el momento para que los activistas estadounidenses luchemos para ganar una guerra política y aprovechemos la inestabilidad política inmediata posterior de la guerra, para promover una visión alternativa para el futuro. Necesitamos trabajar a partir de la movilización en contra de la guerra y expandir la base de gente opuesta al imperio mundial militar estadounidense. Parte de lo que se necesita hacer es prevenir guerras contempladas en el futuro contra Siria, Irán, critical towards many social institutions. In particular the media, which normally serves to promote political and social stability and hegemony, has been discredited.

For millions of people in the US, the United States government is no longer "their" government — it is a hostile, repressive force that endangers them. For most people around the world, it has become clear that the greatest threat to peace and freedom is the US government operating as an unchallenged, unaccountable, nuclear-armed mono-power.

We are Citizens of the Earth

What tangible actions can people take to use the aftermath of the war against Bush's drive to forge an American empire?

It has been inspiring to see the creativity and courage of the Iraq people's resistance to Iraq's occupation by US forces. Bush touted the invasion as an effort to bring "freedom" and liberation to Iraq. But within just a few days after US troops crushed military resistance, thousands of Iraqis began peacefully marching in the streets — with English language banners — demanding "Yankee Go Home."

The Iraqi anti-occupation movement has generally not been pro-Saddam. Participants are happy to be rid of a dictatorship, but don't want to see it replaced by an authoritarian American client state. Here in the United States, anti-war activists should do everything we can to support Iraqi resistance to the occupation. American soldiers have been shooting into peaceful crowds, killing dozens of civilian demonstrators. The American anti-imperialist movement should make clear that the blood shed in Iraq is our brothers' and sisters' blood, and we will hold the US military regime accountable.

We can have solidarity with the Iraqis — while advancing our own domestic goals — by keeping news of Iraqi resistance in the headlines. The US media, after initial version of "freedom" doesn't have much to do with the lives of ordinary people. As usual, the American rulers' idea of "freedom" is freedom for American corporations to do business in Iraq. None of this is a surprise — western imperialism has always used local elites to control the local population.

Saddam's regime was brutal, using summary execution, torture and a whole host of police state tactics. Unfortunately, the US commonly tolerates or promotes human rights violations in regimes it installs in countries it has "liberated." Repressive conditions are common in countries supported by the US. Many of the countries that provided bases for the war against Iraq have horrible records of dictatorship, torture and repression. Agitating against US support for human rights violations can provide the American opposition opportunities to criticize the rush towards a larger US empire.

Before the war, a popular slogan was "no blood for oil." It has been astonishing how quickly and boldly the American occupiers have made clear that dominance over oil was a primary goal of the war. As we go to press, the UN is poised to give the American occupiers direct control over the money generated by Iraqi oil sales. The money will supposedly be used for humanitarian aid and rebuilding Iraq.

The reality is that reconstruction will be carried out by huge American corporations with close ties to the Bush Administration. Bechtel was awarded — without competitive bidding — a $680 million contract for rebuilding only days after the fighting stopped. Vice-president Cheney's old company Halliburton quietly obtained a contract that could be worth up to $7 billion (but may now "only" amount to $500 million) for rebuilding. The rush to war makes a bit more sense when one realizes that Bush's close advisors and allies stand to make millions of dollars off Iraqi oil in the aftermath of the war. It is crucial that American radicals publicize these connections in the aftermath of the war.

The contradictions, lies and brutality pointed out above are just a few of the results of the war against Iraq. Now is the time for US activists to struggle to win the political war, and seize on the political instability in the aftermath of the war to promote an alternative vision for the future. We need to build on the anti-war mobilization and expand estado clientelista pro-estadounidense. Aquí en Estados Unidos los activistas en contra de la guerra debemos hacer lo posible para apoyar la resistencia a la ocupación en Irak. Los soldados estadounidenses han disparado en manifestaciones pacíficas y asesinado a docenas de civiles. El movimiento anti-imperialista estadounidense debe asegurarse de que la sangre derramada en Irak, es la de nuestras hermanas y hermanos, por la cual el régimen militar estadounidense deberá rendir cuentas.

Podemos solidarizarnos con el pueblo iraquí —mientras avanzamos en nuestras metas domésticas— ayudando a mantener las noticias sobre la resistencia iraquí en los encabezados de los medios. Los medios de comunicación estadounidenses, después de una cobertura inicial sobre las manifestaciones anti-estadounidenses en Irak, prácticamente han callado sobre el tema. ¿Esto significa que han parado las protestas en Irak? Es muy poco probable. Tal vez sea hora de enviar medios de comunicación independientes y observadores civiles a Irak.

Mientras este artículo está siendo escrito, la ocupación estadounidense está organizando un régimen "nuevo" para controlar Irak. No es una gran sorpresa que estén solamente reciclando el sistema anterior. La policía y otros oficiales bajo el régimen Baathista "malévolo" ahora han sido recontratados para ser la policía y oficiales del nuevo régimen "libre".

La diferencia es que ahora los líderes son generales estadounidenses y los iraquíes son títeres de aquellos. El pueblo iraquí está preocupado por ver a sus anteriores opresores, nuevamente armados. Pero la versión de "libertad" de Bush no tiene mucho que ver con las vidas de la gente común y corriente. Como siempre, la definición de "libertad" según los gobernantes estadounidenses, es la libertad de las corporaciones para hacer sus negocios en Irak. Nada de esto es una sorpresa: el imperialismo occidental siempre ha usado a las élites locales para controlar las poblaciones.

El régimen de Saddam fue brutal, utilizaba ejecuciones sumarias, tortura y una gran variedad de tácticas de la policía estatal. Desafortunadamente Estados Unidos tolera o promueve las violaciones de los derechos

La prisa para comenzar la guerra, tiene más sentido cuando nos damos cuenta de que los asesores cercanos a Bush y sus aliados, esperan recibir millones de dólares por el petróleo iraquí después de la guerra. Es crucial que el movimiento radical estadounidense difunda estas conexiones después de la guerra.

Las contradicciones, mentiras y violencia que mencionamos anteriormente, son sólo unos cuantos de los resultados de la guerra contra Irak. Ahora es el momento para que los activistas estadounidenses luchemos para ganar una guerra política y aprovechemos la inestabilidad política inmediata posterior de la guerra, para promover una visión alternativa para el futuro. Necesitamos trabajar a partir de la movilización en contra de la guerra y expandir la base de gente opuesta al imperio mundial militar estadounidense. Parte de lo que se necesita hacer es prevenir guerras contempladas en el futuro contra Siria, Irán, Corea del Norte, Sudán y Libia (así como intervenciones en Las Filipinas, Indonesia, Colombia, Venezuela, etc.), pero esto no es todo. La oposición estadounidense tiene que luchar por algo, no solamente en contra de todo.

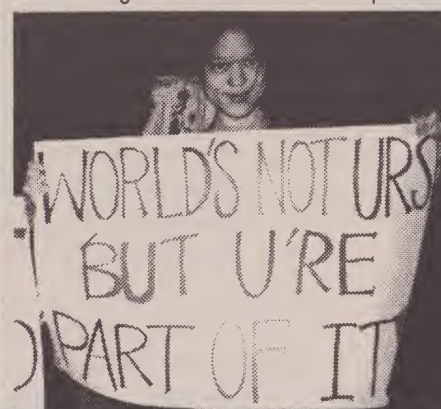

Así como Seattle y el movimiento en contra de la globalización unieron a los ambientalistas y activistas laborales y de maquiladoras, la resistencia del movimiento posterior a la guerra, debe reunir las lecciones e ideas de los activistas contra la globalización con una internacionalización nueva, basada en el movimiento contra la guerra. Hay oportunidades alentadoras para unir al movimiento de resistencia estadounidense con movimientos en todo el mundo que están luchando para resistir la dominación de Estados Unidos. Después de la guerra contra Irak no hay tiempo para retirarse en el silencio, la apatía y el derrotismo. Como Joe Hill dijo, "don't mourn, ORGANIZE!" ("No guarden luto ¡Organícense!") peacefully marching in the streets — with English language banners — demanding "Yankee Go Home."

The Iraqi anti-occupation movement has generally not been pro-Saddam. Participants are happy to be rid of a dictatorship, but don't want to see it replaced by an authoritarian American client state. Here in the United States, anti-war activists should do everything we can to support Iraqi resistance to the occupation. American soldiers have been shooting into peaceful crowds, killing dozens of civilian demonstrators. The American anti-imperialist movement should make clear that the blood shed in Iraq is our brothers' and sisters' blood, and we will hold the US military regime accountable.

We can have solidarity with the Iraqis — while advancing our own domestic goals — by keeping news of Iraqi resistance in the headlines. The US media, after initial reporting about anti-American protest in Iraq, has largely gone silent on this topic. Does this mean that protests have stopped in Iraq? It seems unlikely. Perhaps it's time to get a few independent media sources and civilian observers to Iraq.

As this article is being written, the American occupiers are quickly organizing a "new" regime to control Iraq. Not occupiers direct control over the money generated by Iraqi oil sales. The money will supposedly be used for humanitarian aid and rebuilding Iraq.

The reality is that reconstruction will be carried out by huge American corporations with close ties to the Bush Administration. Bechtel was awarded — without competitive bidding — a $680 million contract for rebuilding only days after the fighting stopped. Vice-president Cheney's old company Halliburton quietly obtained a contract that could be worth up to $7 billion (but may now "only" amount to $500 million) for rebuilding. The rush to war makes a bit more sense when one realizes that Bush's close advisors and allies stand to make millions of dollars off Iraqi oil in the aftermath of the war. It is crucial that American radicals publicize these connections in the aftermath of the war.

The contradictions, lies and brutality pointed out above are just a few of the results of the war against Iraq. Now is the time for US activists to struggle to win the political war, and seize on the political instability in the aftermath of the war to promote an alternative vision for the future. We need to build on the anti-war mobilization and expand the base of people opposed to a US global military empire. Preventing future contemplated wars against Syria, Iran, North Korea, Sudan, Libya (and interventions in the Philippines, Indonesia, Colombia, Venezuela, etc.) is part of the picture, but isn't enough. The American opposition has to be for something, not just against everything.

Just as Seattle and the globalization movement brought together environmentalists and labor / sweatshop activists, the resistance movement in the wake of the war must bring together the lessons and ideas of the anti-globalization activists with a new internationalism based on the anti-war movement. There are exciting opportunities to unite the US resistance movement with movements around the world who are struggling to resist US domination.

In the wake of the war against Iraq, there is no time to retreat into silence, apathy and defeatism. Like Joe Hill said, don't mourn — ORGANIZE!!

Target WTO: Sacramento/Cancun

Continued from page 1

ordinary, everyday, secret war is claiming victims right now.

Thousands of people will use a diversity of tactics to disrupt the WTO in Sacramento ranging from militant, mobile direct action to legal protests to street theater to educational events. Sacramento is flat with warm weather in June — perfect for mobile tactics, quick disguise changes, bike actions, disruptive public sex, etc. Get together with your friends now and figure out how to be part of the struggle. With creativity, spontaneity, courage and humor we'll prevent the WTO from proceeding.

On to Cancun

Trade ministers from around the world will be in Cancun to conclude agreements on services (water, health care, and education); agriculture; and intellectual property among other topics. Each new agreement concluded by the WTO transfers more power over the work we do, the way we live, and what we know to multi-national corporations. Under the WTO, these corporations gain power to overturn any local laws regulating labor, health or environmental matters as "unfair barriers to trade." Thus, the WTO brings us even farther from a world in which neither corporations nor governments control our lives. In the name of freedom and the survival of the earth, it's vital to fight the growth of corporate power and the expansion of the WTO.

The convention center where the Summit will be held is at the tip of a long strip of land boarded on one side by the ocean, and on the other by the Nichupte Lagoon. Two bridges connect this strip to the main land and downtown. Most of the workers who serve the tourist industry on the island live on the mainland, so the authorities will have to try to keep access to the island open during the meeting. But with only two bridges and perhaps tens of thousands of protesters, this could be difficult.

There may also be attempts to block access from the airport to the island to prevent people from getting to the meeting site. Cancun's airport is on the mainland — served by a single three-mile, two-lane highway thickly forested on either side.

In Seattle, we had to surround a convention center that was accessible from every direction, requiring the subdivision of downtown Seattle by blockaders into 13 sectors. In Cancun, the tactical issues may be much simpler.

For Americans hoping to go to Cancun, one significant problem may be crossing the border. Although you can drive to Cancun from anywhere in the US in a few days or fly relatively inexpensively since it's a popular tourist destination, it's likely that the police will stop people who appear to be on their way to the protest.

Because corporate controlled free trade — and in particular the North American Free Trade Agreement — has been such a disaster for the average Mexican, resistance to the WTO meeting is expected to be strong in Mexico. Hundreds of Mexican individuals and organizations have been participating in planning the resistance to the Cancun meeting.

Nonetheless, participation in the protests by people from the United States and outside Mexico is also important. The chances for brutal repression of demonstrations may be somewhat less if it would mean attacking large numbers of US citizens.

Nurturing international solidarity against the WTO and in favor of a future controlled by people instead of corporations is crucial. When thousands of ordinary Mexicans and Americans march arm and arm against the power structure that exploits them, it will become clear that workers in the US and Mexico have everything to gain together, and everything to lose if they can be divided.

The protests in Seattle were powerful not because the media correctly conveyed the complex economic and social arguments made by the thousands in the streets — we know such messages won't get through the corporate media. Rather, highly visible resistance to the WTO and corporate control are crucial because they demonstrate to ordinary folks everywhere that everyone isn't united around a corporate future, and there are still opportunities to struggle against the ruling order.

Many people throughout the world are deeply dissatisfied with the life offered them by corporate control. People work meaningless, degrading jobs so that a tiny minority can get rich. The earth is being destroyed. The material abundance created by all the work and resource extraction is hollow — a million identical strip malls for the privileged western nations; a million identical slums and sweatshops in the third world. Existence is a vast prison without walls — the real decisions are out of ordinary people's hands.

When we create images of passion, rage and a refusal to accept the life corporations offer us, we're building a powerful vision of hope for something different. Visible opposition is our best hope to break the isolation and resignation that corporate society uses to control the future. We don't need to passively accept our fate — people can struggle and build something better.

Winter Wonderland Of War

Continued from page 6

rational humans involved? How did they justify this war through the thin Hitlerian "big lie?" I wanted to talk to a pro-war person and learn.

As the protest wound down in Jackson Square, and I drank a lot of coffee and sat far enough away to not hear the dull speakers, my prayer was answered. A man in his fifties action the day after the war started, I contemplated what makes the rest of the country different. Part of it is certainly the strong anti-war public opinion in the inner Bay Area. But what really struck me was how everyone hit the streets, artists, punx, and workers. Everyone just felt that it was time to

Leaping Leftovers

lives. In the name of freedom and the survival of the thousands in the streets — we know by the thousands in the streets — we know

Winter Wonderland Of War

Continued from page 6

rational humans involved? How did they justify this war through the thin Hitlerian "big lie?" I wanted to talk to a pro-war person and learn.

As the protest wound down in Jackson Square, and I drank a lot of coffee and sat far enough away to not hear the dull speakers, my prayer was answered. A man in his fifties walked up to me and started debating me. At first it was just like the Tom Tomorrow cartoon. He'd bring up 9-11 or nuclear weapons, and I'd explain the truth of the matter, and he'd immediately change the subject. His wife listened to the discussion from a fearful distance.

He gradually slipped in concepts like the origin of human evil, and the intelligence behind the universe. I realized that he didn't share my curiosity about the other team; he thought that the protesters needed their souls saved just like the drunkards and fornicators of Mardi Gras. What else but the great tempter himself would inspire people to gather publicly against our rightful civil authorities? I kept looking at my watch so he'd realize I had somewhere to go (anywhere).

San Francisco

The e-mail from the Slingshot zone requested perspectives on America outside the Bay Area anti-war bubble. Seeing the glorious, historic downtown San Francisco action the day after the war started, I contemplated what makes the rest of the country different. Part of it is certainly the strong anti-war public opinion in the inner Bay Area. But what really struck me was how everyone hit the streets, artists, punx, and workers. Everyone just felt that it was time to act. In other cities, the perception of "protest culture," was that walking around with a sign was something that only the "activists" did. I didn't see people from the rest of my life at demonstrations. People everywhere say orderly protests aren't enough. But whereas in San Francisco that means do more, everywhere else it seems to mean do nothing. Ironically, part of the reason I strayed from Oakland was my feeling that the activist ghetto vortex was too out of touch with other people.

Boy Scouts in Battle

On the road, by train, bus and plane, people didn't talk about the war. Unlike 9-11, there was no perception of national consensus that would make such politics polite conversation. But I still get the sense that no one, regardless of their beliefs, believes the corporate media anymore. I found the Eastern Washington local paper on the train; the front story was about U.S. troops risking their lives to save a little old Iraqi lady caught in the crossfire.

Shoot 'em, Boys

Continued from page 3

"The fact that so many people that day received injuries to their heads, arms, and torsos strongly indicates that the officers were not firing these weapons as the manufacturers intended. The fact that so many people, like myself, were shot in the back, underscores the fact that the Oakland Police Department was firing on people who were running away. As reported by the San

force in the police arsenal, second only to firearms. In fact, these weapons are classified as being more severe than a police canine bite. Therefore, according to the stated policy of the Oakland Police Department, if the police had been justified on April 7 in shooting us with wooden bullets, they would also have been justified in unleashing police dogs on the Leaping Leftovers Batman!

By PB Floyd

During the period leading up to the war — to try to dispel the fear and depression — our house started trying to name all of our refrigerator leftovers with radical, inspiring, funny names.

Intifada enchilada. Black Eyed Bush Salad. Orange Alert Tahini sauce.

Silly, you protest? Well, maybe this is just the kind of silliness that we need to keep sane in a world that increasingly seems to be dominated by power, violence, consumerism and blind obedience. In a system based on rationality, mechanistic capitalist economics, mass industrial production and computer technology, humor is a particularly human quality. Computers and machines can imitate all kinds of mechanical, rational human behavior, but they can't crack jokes. Only our beautiful, biological, imprecise brains can react to the world with a new silly idea, like radical names for refrigerator leftovers.

Photo-syntho-soup. Brocc'o'leave Iraq pasta. Darn it Dahl Bush

The personal really is political. Those in power spread propaganda with their capitalist technological communications systems like television. Thus, the we need to learn how to spread the vision of liberation and life everywhere in humble, small, invisible ways. Like grass slowly growing up through the cracks in the concrete, perhaps our counter-information can eventually sneak up on the mighty machine and topple it.

Commie red spice sauce. Lentils against the war. Intersection blocking asparagus.

People in a resistance movement against imperial terrorism need to keep joy, inspiration and rebellion close at hand — like in a re-used yogurt container for your lunch. After each meal, we'd wash the dishes, wipe the counters and try to figure out what to name the food we had just eaten. After a while, we had to develop a few simple rules: the name had to give at least some vague idea of what the food was. Before the rule, the refrigerator became a collection of slogans devoid of any meaning. The rule made the game harder in a good way, because you had to figure out fancy relationships between food and a particular political message.

Coalition to marinate Tofu. Intl. Women's Day Spread of Peace.

When your whole house is out in the street day after day resisting an unjust war — blocking intersections, hanging banners from freeway overpasses, going to meetings, tying up traffic with bike masses, painting signs — you're going to need some good, nutritious food when you get home at night. In times of struggle, spending time to cook, eat and take care of yourself is even more important so you can be effective the next day. Cooking from scratch rather than eating out is best — and you get to name the leftovers.

cartoon. He'd bring up 9-11 or nuclear weapons, and I'd explain the truth of the matter, and he'd immediately change the subject. His wife listened to the discussion from a fearful distance.

He gradually slipped in concepts like the origin of human evil, and the intelligence behind the universe. I realized that he didn't share my curiosity about the other team; he thought that the protesters needed their souls saved just like the drunkards and fornicators of Mardi Gras. What else but the great tempter himself would inspire people to gather publicly against our rightful civil authorities? I kept looking at my watch so he'd realize I had somewhere to go (anywhere).

San Francisco

The e-mail from the Slingshot zone requested perspectives on America outside the Bay Area anti-war bubble. Seeing the glorious, historic downtown San Francisco with a sign was something that only the "activists" did. I didn't see people from the rest of my life at demonstrations. People everywhere say orderly protests aren't enough. But whereas in San Francisco that means do more, everywhere else it seems to mean do nothing. Ironically, part of the reason I strayed from Oakland was my feeling that the activist ghetto vortex was too out of touch with other people.

Boy Scouts in Battle

On the road, by train, bus and plane, people didn't talk about the war. Unlike 9-11, there was no perception of national consensus that would make such politics polite conversation. But I still get the sense that no one, regardless of their beliefs, believes the corporate media anymore. I found the Eastern Washington local paper on the train; the front story was about U.S. troops risking their lives to save a little old Iraqi lady caught in the crossfire.

By PB Floyd

During the period leading up to the war — to try to dispel the fear and depression — our house started trying to name all of our refrigerator leftovers with radical, inspiring, funny names.

Intifada enchilada. Black Eyed Bush Salad. Orange Alert Tahini sauce.

Silly, you protest? Well, maybe this is just the kind of silliness that we need to keep sane in a world that increasingly seems to be dominated by power, violence, consumerism and blind obedience. In a system based on rationality, mechanistic capitalist economics, mass industrial production and computer technology, humor is a particularly human quality. Computers and machines can imitate all kinds of mechanical, rational human behavior, but they can't crack jokes. Only our beautiful, biological, imprecise brains can react to the world with a new silly idea, like radical names for refrigerator leftovers.

Photo-syntho-soup. Brocc'o'leave Iraq pasta. Darn it Dahl Bush

The personal really is political. Those in power spread propaganda with their capitalist technological communications systems like television. Thus, the we need to learn how to spread the vision of liberation and life everywhere in humble, small, invisible ways. Like grass slowly growing up through the cracks in the concrete, perhaps our counter-information can eventually sneak up on the force in the police arsenal, second only to firearms. In fact, these weapons are classified as being more severe than a police canine bite. Therefore, according to the stated policy of the Oakland Police Department, if the police had been justified on April 7 in shooting us with wooden bullets, they would also have been justified in unleashing police dogs on the crowd. I think we all know exactly which images that evokes, and we all know exactly how wrong that would have been.

"Word told the Contra Costa Times that his decision to shoot at us was influenced by one of the shipping lines. According to the Times, Chief Word said that 'APL told us, 'You have to clear the property.' This sounds frighteningly like Chief Word allowed American Presidents Line to assist him in deciding when to use force against the citizens of Oakland."

mighty machine and topple it.

Commie red spice sauce. Lentils against the war. Intersection blocking asparagus.

People in a resistance movement against imperial terrorism need to keep joy, inspiration and rebellion close at hand — like in a re-used yogurt container for your lunch. After each meal, we'd wash the dishes, wipe the counters and try to figure out what to name the food we had just eaten. After a while, we had to develop a few simple rules: the name had to give at least some vague idea of what the food was. Before the rule, the refrigerator became a collection of slogans devoid of any meaning. The rule made the game harder in a good way, because you had to figure out fancy relationships between food and a particular political message.

Coalition to marinate Tofu. Intl. Women's Day Spread of Peace.

When your whole house is out in the street day after day resisting an unjust war — blocking intersections, hanging banners from freeway overpasses, going to meetings, tying up traffic with bike masses, painting signs — you're going to need some good, nutritious food when you get home at night. In times of struggle, spending time to cook, eat and take care of yourself is even more important so you can be effective the next day. Cooking from scratch rather than eating out is best — and you get to name the leftovers.

Shoot 'em, Boys

Continued from page 3

"The fact that so many people that day received injuries to their heads, arms, and torsos strongly indicates that the officers were not firing these weapons as the manufacturers intended. The fact that so many people, like myself, were shot in the back, underscores the fact that the Oakland Police Department was firing on people who were running away. As reported by the San Francisco Bay Guardian, the manufacturer's training manual states that, 'when firing wooden bullets, areas such as the head, neck, spine, and groin . . . should be avoided unless it is the intent to deliver deadly force.'

"Oakland Police Departmental General Order K-3, governing the use of force, similarly requires officers to avoid firing these weapons at these areas of the body. According to the Department's use of force policy, beanbag (and presumably wooden) bullets are classified as the second most severe use of Action Calendar!

June

June 6 • 8 pm

Free film "Battle Of Algiers" 3124 Shattuck Ave Berkeley

June 7th - 12th

Salmon River Action Camp - In the beautiful and wild Klamath Basin in Northern California. Large roadless areas are slated for logging incursions. Contact 503 957 5572 or email bwsisq@yahoo.com, mazamaforestdefense.org

June 7 • 8 pm

Film: "Banned in Berkeley" and performance by 5 disabled women artists on their sexuality and relationships. Long Haul 3124 Shattuck Berkeley

June 7-8

FTAA Miami, Anti-Capitalist Consulta-Louisville, KY Pre-register: ftaaconsulta@yahoo.com

June 13 • 6 pm

Critical Mass bike ride Meet at Downtown Berkeley BART

June 13-15

Allied Media Conference-Bowling Green, Ohio (419) 494-6850 www.alliedmediaprojects.org

June 14 • 8 pm

Free film "Dersu Uzala" 3124 Shattuck Ave. Berkeley

June 20 • 5:30 pm

Critical Mass bike ride in Alameda. Meet at Alameda City Hall, Oak and Santa Clara (every third Friday)

June 21st • 8 pm

Free film "Videodrome" 3124 Shattuck Ave. Berkeley

June 20-22

Biodevastation Conference Washington, DC Contact larcher@foe.org

June 23-25

Stop the WTO Summit of Ministers of Trade, Agriculture, and Environment- Sacramento, CA Contact (916)497-1111 www.sacmobilization.org

June 27- July 26

Bike Summer 2003 New York City www.bikesummer.org

June 27th - July 7th

Minnesota Earth First! Round River Rendezvous Contact Minnehaha EF! rrrmn@ziplip.com

July

July 10-13

Green Anarchist gathering-Allegheny Forest, Pennsylvania www.blackandgreen.org

July 11 • 6 pm

Critical Mass Berkeley Meet at Downtown Berkeley BART

July 18-20

Forest Action Training Camp outside Portland, Oregon (Cascadia Summer) cfa@spiritone.org (503) 241-4879

August

August 1-3

Portland Zine Symposium PSU campus, downtown Portland OR www.pdxzines.com

August 8 • 8 pm

Party for Long Haul Infoshop's 10th birthday. 3124 Shattuck Ave., Berkeley.

August 8-10

Break the Chains Conference against the prison industrial complex. U of Oregon Eugene. www.breakthechains.net

August 9-10 • 10 am - 4

Zine Fest San Francisco location TBA www.sfzinefest.com

August 10 • 1:30

Stop the Warmakers, Livermore Labs (925)443-7148

August 16 • noon-6

LA Zine Fiesta Plummer Park Community Center, 7377 Santa Monica Blvd, West Hollywood CA www.geocities.com/lazinefiesta

September and later

September 10 -15

Shut down the WTO Ministerial • Cancun, Mexico

October 25-26

2nd Toronto Anarchist Bookfair 2003 519 Church St. Community Centre tab2003@ziplip.com .

October 25 • 10 am--6 pm

New Orleans Bookfair Barrister's Gallery 1724 Oretha Castle Haley Blvd. www.nolabookfair.com

November 17 - 21

Disrupt the FTAA Miami Ministerial Summit • Miami Florida 202 778-3320, 510 663-0888, www.ftaamiami.org.

Long Haul Infoshop Radical Library

Radical Reading room • Lending Library • Archive • Radical Resource Center • Book & Zine Shop

Open Mon - Thurs 6-9 • Sun 3-11

Events Calendar
www.thelonghaul.org

3124 Shattuck Ave. • Berkeley, Calif. • 510 540-0751

Long Haul

3124 Shattuck Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94705

CHANGE SERVICE REQUESTED

If you mail ordered a 2003 Slingshot Organizer, here's a sample copy — see page 2
If last issue on your table reads "76" see page 2 to continue your subscription or you will be deleted!

Non-Profit Org.
U.S. Postage PAID
Berkeley, CA
Permit No. 129